Where there is a positive enactment of the Indian legislature the proper course is to examine the language of the statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law or the English Law upon which it may be founded. Such an enactment cannot be qualified or neutralized by an indication of intention gathered from previous legislation on the subject and it is only where from the imperfection of the language used it is impossible to know what the intention of the legislature is, without inquiring further the circumstances with reference to which the words were used, these circumstances may be looked into. The office of Judges is jus dicere and not jus dare to interpret the law and not to make law or give law. It is their duty to abide by the words of the statute without attempting to reform it according to the supposed intention of the legislature, or exclude cases which fall within the express meaning of the rules in order to make the law reasonable. ———Provisions must supersede intention.

When the Legislature passes an enactment, its provisions must be looked to rather than the intention of the Legislature as revealed in the discussion which preceded the passing of the Act. ———Words admitting of one meaning—Courts should not speculate on the intention of the Legislature.

When the words admit of but one meaning Court is not at liberty to speculate on the intention of the legislature and to construe them according to its own notions of what ought to have been enacted. Nothing could be more dangerous than to make such considerations the ground for construing an enactment that is unambiguous in itself. To depart from the meaning on account of such views is, in truth, not to construe the Act, but to alter it. But the business of the interpreter is not to improve the statute; it is to expound it. The question for him is not what the legislature meant, but what its language means, i.e., what the Act has said that it meant. To give a construction contrary to, or different from, that which the words import or can possibly import, is not to interpret law but to make it, and the Judges are to remember that their office is Jus-dicere, not Jus-dare. ———Reasons for a rule are not to be considered.

Where the legislature enacts a general rule, its operation cannot be governed by such consideration as whether looking to the reasons which led the Legislature to enact it, it is necessary to apply the rule or not in particular cases. If it be held that a rule need not be applied if the mischief it sought to prevent is not likely to happen in a particular case the applicability of the rules would depend upon the result of a preliminary investigation as to the likelihood of the mischief. Where the rule is expressed in unambiguous language it must be applied in every case where the facts to which it is intended to apply exist. (Kotwal, A.J.C.). It is for the Legislature when it creates a new jurisdiction to define and limit the extent of that jurisdiction and when question arises as to what powers are or are not conferred, the answer ought to be found within the four corners of the statute. —Meaning of words—"From a certain date."

———"From a certain date" means "on and after that date."

A notification contained in Fort St. George Gazette of May 5th of 1922 published fresh rules imposing increased institution fees on the suits on the Original Side of the High Court. The words of notification are "the amendments to come into force from the date of publication in the Fort St. George Gazette." The notification reached the High Court about 5 P.M. on 5th of May.

INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Meaning of words—General words and phrases.

Held, per Chief Justice—(1) If the named date is the beginning of a defined limited period, that is, where there is a terminus a quo then prima facie the first day is included. Therefore 'from a named date' means "on and after that day" and the plaints filed on May 5th were subject to the amended rules.

Per Coutts-Trotter, J.—Where the statute fixes only the terminus a quo of a state of things which is envisaged as to last indefinitely the common law rule obtains that you ought to neglect fractions of a day and the statute or the regulation or order takes effect from the first moment of the day on which it was enacted or passed, that is to say from midnight of the day preceding the day on which it is promulgated; where on the other hand a statute delimits a period marked both by a terminus a quo and a terminus ad quem, the former is to be excluded and the latter is to be included in the reckoning.

Held, this notification clearly came within the former class and must be taken to have come into force on the first second of the 5th May, that is to say, from midnight of the 4th May and therefore the plaints filed on the 5th May are liable to the enhanced fees laid down by the notification.

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—There was nothing to justify charging the people who filed their plaints on 5th May without the knowledge of the notification which only reached the High Court at 5 P.M. with higher fees in respect of plaints filed during the course of the day,

Held, further that the law is that there is no hard and fast rule in deciding whether the word "from" is inclusive or exclusive of the date of notification and that each case must depend upon its own circumstances and subject-matter and therefore justice and equity demand that the date of notification ought to be excluded. If the words of an Act are clear the Court must follow them, even though they lead to a manifest absurdity. The Court has nothing to do with the question whether the Legislature has committed an absurdity. If the words of an Act admit of two interpretations then they are not clear ; and if one interpretation leads to an absurdity, and the other does not the Court will conclude that the Legislature did not intend to lead to an absurdity and will adopt the other interpretation. But the Court of Law has nothing to do with the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a provision, except so far as it may help them in interpreting what the Legislature has said. Lord Esher in Reg. v. Judge of the City of London Court, (1892) 1 Q.B. 273, 290 and Lord Halisbury in Cooke v. *Charless A. The rule of 'strict construction' of penal statutes as modified in modern times is not so rigid or unbending as it was in times gone by and the rule means very little more than that such statutes are to be fairly construed like all others according to the legislative intent as expressed by the statute itself or arising out of it by necessary implication, but if there be any fair and reasonable doubt, the statutes should be so construed as to give the party sought to be charged the benefit of the doubt. ———Cases not falling strictly within the words should not be included.

Strict construction must be placed upon a penal enactment. In construing such an enactment no case must be held to fall within it, which does not come both within the reasonable meaning of its terms as well as within its spirit and scope.

If the Legislature has not used words sufficiently comprehensive to include within its prohibition all the cases which fall within the mischief intended to be prevented, it is not competent to a Court to extend them. 25 Cal. 160; 21 Mad. 4; 6 N.L.R. 53 and 56 P.R. 1911, Rel. on (Tek Chand, J.). ———Plain and common sense meaning should be taken.

All penal statutes are to be construed strictly, that is to say, the Court must see that the thing charged as an offence is within the plain meaning of the words, used, and must not strain the words on any notion that there has been a slip that there has been a casus omissus, that the thing is so clearly within the mischief that it must have been intended to be included and would have been included if thought of. But where the thing is brought within the words and within the spirit, there a penal enactment is to be construed like any other instrument, according to the fair common sense meaning of the language used, and the Court is not to find or make any doubt or ambiguity in the language of a penal statute, where such doubt or ambiguity would clearly not be found or made in the same language in any other instrument. Dyke v. Elliott, 1871 L.R. 4 P.C. 184, Ref (Fawcett and Madgavkar, JJ.). INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Penal Act.

——Whether command to a rule-making body is directory or mandatory depends on the terms of particular enactment.

The provisions of a penal statute must be strictly construed; and it is equally true that in penal statutes the duties cast upon bodies with delegated powers are generally construed as imperative rather than directory. But each statute has to be construed according to its own terms and no inflexible rule can be laid down to determine whether the command to a body entrusted with the power of framing rules is to be considered merely as a direction involving no invalidating consequences if disregarded or as coercive with an implied nullification if disobeyed. In each case regard must be had to the scope and object of the enactment in question. (Fforde and Campbell, JJ.). EMPEROR v. BARKAT.

——A penal statute like the Penal Code should be construed with the strict and narrow sense. When an enactment may entail penal consequences no violence must be done to its language in order to bring people within it: but rather care must be taken that no one is brought within it who is not within its strict language: London County Council v. Aylesbury Co., 1 Q.B. 106 and Hull Dock Co. v. Browne, 36 R.R. 459, Ref. (*Findlay, Offg. —Persona Designata.

——Presiding Officer of a Court directed to perform functions of newly constituted authority.

When by an act of the Legislature, a new authority is constituted for the purpose of determining questions concerning rights which are themselves the creations of the Act, and a Judge or Presiding Officer of a Court, as distinct from the Court itself, is directed to perform the functions of the newly created authority, then it must be presumed, unless the contrary is expressly enacted or necessarily implied, that intention of the Legislature was that the Judge or Presiding Officer should perform those functions as a persona designata and not as a Court. Such a presumption is stronger in the case of a Court like the Rangoon Small Cause Court which consists of a plurality of Judges when only one particular Judge is invested with the new powers. ———Codifying statute—Reference to earlier Case-law allowed.

The Indian Penal Code is meant to be a codifying statute, as a statute intended to be complete in itself with regard to the subject-matter with which it deals. No doubt a codifying statute does not exclude reference to earlier case-law on the subject covered by the statute for the purpose of throwing light on the true interpretation of the words of the statute where they are, or can be contended to be, open to rival constructions, but it cannot be argued that matter outside of the statute can be invoked, not by way of construing its provisions but of adding something to it which is admittedly not to be found within it. —Repealing Act.

———Later statute generally repeals earlier—Rule discussed.

The later statute repeals the earlier if both are equally general but if the later Act is a general Act but the earlier Act is a Special Act, the earlier Act is generally not repealed by the later Act. When there is a conflict between two special Acts, each of which may be described as special in some particular sense, the Court should lean again the repeal of the earlier Act by implication and unless it is absolutely clear that the operation of the first Act has to be curtailed by the later Act, the previous Act should be held to continue in force even though the latter Act may be regarded as special in some other sense. Speciality in respect of locality is given greater importance rather than speciality in respect of subject-matter, otherwise it would be impossible to compare the degree of speciality. 15 Bom.L.R. 60 and Seward v. Vera Cruz, 10 A.C. 59 and other English cases, Ref. (Ramesam, J.). INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Retrospective effect—Extent of.

———When the question arises whether a rule framed under an Act of the Indian Legislature has by implication repealed a bye-law made under authority of the local legislature the test to be applied to determine the question raised is whether there is a repugnancy between the two provisions. (Mukerjee, Ag.C.J. and Fletcher, J.). INDIAN MOTOR TAXI CAR CO. v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

———Effect of.

It is a general rule that when the Legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action, its enactments, unless in express terms they apply to pending action, do not affect them. But there is an exception to the rule namely where enactments merely affect procedure and do not extend to rights of action. Re, Joseph Suche & Co. Ltd., (1875) 11 Ch. —Retrospective effect—Declaratory Acts.

———Clear intention must be manifested.

Enactments which are declaratory in form are not necessarily retrospective in their operation. Young v. Adams, (1898) A. C. 469, Foll. If an Act touches a right in existence at the passing of an Act no retrospective effect should be given to the Act unless a clear intention to that effect is manifested. Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving, (1905) A. ———Apply to cases pending at appellate stage.

A declaratory Act is an Act to remove doubts existing as to the meaning or effect of a statute, and the usual reason for passing a declaratory Act is to set aside what the legislative body deems to have been a judicial error. Declaratory Acts like judgments, decide cases pending when the judgments are given but do not re-open decided cases.

An appealable decree against which an appeal has been filed is not a decided case for applicability of declaratory Acts. (Kanhaiya Lal and Ashworth, JJ.). MT. MODI BIBI v. KASHI UPADHYA.

87 I.C. 72=A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 377.

—Retrospective effect—Extent of.

———When a statute is retrospective with regard to certain sections only and silent as to others the rule to be followed in construing such a statute is that the Court should examine the subject-matter of the enactment of the particular section and decide whether it is to be supposed that retrospective construction was intended by the legislature to be given to it. ——Statutes are prospective unless there is clear provision to the contrary.

The general rule is that all Statutes are to be construed to operate in future, unless from the language a restrospective effect is clearly intended. Every Statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, or imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect of the transactions or considerations already passed must be presumed, out of respect to the Legislature to be intended not to have a retrospective operation. 18 C. ——Rights and procedure.

It is settled law that new procedure affects bygone transactions and alterations in procedure are always retrospective. INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES—Retrospective effect—Vested rights.

It is now authoritatively settled that the right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure, but is a vested right which inheres in a party from the commencement of the action in the Court of first instance. If according to the law in force at the time when the action was started in the Court of first instance the ultimate decision of such Court was appealable, the right to prefer or prosecute an appeal therefrom is not affected by subsequent change of the law abolishing the appeal or modifying its forum unless it is so provided expressly in the amending statute or follows by necessary implication from its terms. Colonial Sugar Refining Co., Ltd. v. Irving, (1905) A.C. 369, Rel. on. (Broadway, Addison and Tek Chand, JJ.). ——Vested rights must be respected.

Statutes should be interpreted, if possible, so as to respect vested rights and in the absence of anything in an enactment to show that it is to have retrospective operation it cannot be so construed as to have the effect of altering the law applicable to a claim in the litigation at the time when the Act is passed. (Broadway, Addison and Tek Chand, JJ.). (BHAI) KIRPA SINGH v. RASSALDAR AJAIPAL SINGH. 113 I.C. 529=10 Lah. 165=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 627 (F.B.).

——Existing rights explained.

While provisions of a statute dealing merely with matters of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have retrospective effect attributed to them, provisions which touch a right in existence at the passing of the statute are not to be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment. Provisions which, if applied retrospectively, would deprive of their existing finality, orders which, when the statute came into force were final, are provisions which touch existing rights. Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving, (1905) A. C. 369, Rel. on. (Lord Blanesburgh.) DELHI CLOTH AND GENERAL MILLS CO., LTD. v. INCOME-TAX COMMISSIONER. 106 I.C. 156=54 I.A. 421=25 A.L.J. 964=47 C.L.J. 1=32 C.W.N 237=8 P.L.T. 791=4 O.W.N. 1053=30 Bom. —— Unless from the language of a statute a contrary effect is clearly intended, even statute which takes away or impairs vested rights, must be presumed not to have a retrospective operation, although this presumption does not apply to provisions which affect only the procedure and practice of the Court. ———Principle explained.

Per Oldfield, J.—It is a fundamental rule, when vested rights are in question, that no statute shall be construed, so as to have a retrospective operation, unless such a construction is required plainly by its language. Mere implications cannot fulfil this requirement. Also the postponement of the operation of a statute cannot be recognised as showing that the enactment is to be retrospective in its effects. It would be unsafe in the extreme ———Laws presumed prospective.

Laws should be construed as prospective, not as retrospective, unless they are expressly made applicable to past transactions and to such as are still pending. Where the law is altered by Statute pending the action, the law, as it existed when the action was commenced, must decide the rights of the parties to the suit, unless the Legislature express a clear intention to vary the relation of the litigant parties to each other. Statutes which take away or impair vested rights under existing laws or attach a new disability in respect of transactions or considerations already passed, must be presumed not to have a retrospective operation. ———New enactment providing new rights and their remedies—Procedure in the new enactment should be followed.

If a new enactment is such that certain new rights unknown previously to law are created by the new statute and certain remedies are provided for the infringement of such rights, it must logically follow that it was the clear intention of the legislature that such remedies should be enforced only in the manner and by following the procedure indicated. No doubt it is open to the legislature even in other cases to take away any subsisting general right of suit and provide a special remedy instead, but it must be done by express provision and such a general right is incapable of being taken away merely by implication. ——Rule framed under section of Act is not 'Law' unless Act itself says so—Power to regulate does not imply power to prohibit.

Where a statute under the authority of which rules are promulgated itself declares that they shall have the same effect as if enacted in the statute, the validity of the rules cannot be canvassed by Courts of Law. Nor can any Court reject them as uncertain and unenforceable.

But where the statute does not so provide their validity can be canvassed and the Court can reject them as unenforceable on the ground of unreasonableness or uncertainty. They do not constitute 'law'. The essence of the law is that it is enforceable as law, and though the Courts may construe it they cannot reject or quash it.

A power to regulate does not involve a power to prohibit.

Per Mullick, J.—A notification issued in exercise of a power conferred by statute is as much a part of the law as if it had been incorporated in the statute. No hard and fast line can be drawn between a nullity and an irregularity. But an irregularity is a deviation from a rule of law which does not take away the foundation or authority for the proceeding or apply to its whole operation, whereas a nullity is a proceeding that is taken without any foundation for it or is so essentially defective as to be of no avail or effect whatever, or is void and incapable of being validated. The test is to see whether the party can waive the objection; if he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity; if he cannot, it is a nullity. 9 Dow. 28, Ref. (Mookerjee and Chotzner, JJ.). IRELAND, GOVERNMENT OF, ACT (1920).—Suit in respect of allowances.

———Constitution of Irish Free State, Art. 78.

The appellants, who were formerly established civil servants in the employment of the Crown in Southern Ireland, were, by the several instruments which effected or followed upon the establishment of the Irish Free State transferred to the service of the State. After retirement they being dissatisfied with the retiring allowances granted to them by the Minister of Finance brought an action in the High Court against the Attorney-General of the Irish Free State, claiming a series of declarations as to the allowances to which they were entitled. It was argued on behalf of the respondent that the appellants had only a right to put forward their claim to the Minister of Finance and to receive such compensation as he might award to them,

Held, that the constitution of the Committee set up by the Minister of Finance is an Advisory Committee only with no statutory powers and therefore its conclusions have no binding effect and that the appellants have a legal right which may be asserted in the Courts of the Irish Free State and there was no objection to the form of the action which was brought against the Attorney-General for a declaration of rights and was in accordance with the well-known decisions in Dyson v. Attorney-General, (1911) 1 K. Where, with the acquiescence of both parties, a Judge departs from the ordinary course of procedure and decides upon a question of fact, it is incompetent for the parties afterwards to assume that they have then an alternative mode of proceeding and to treat the matter as if it had been heard in due course. Burgess v. Morton, (1896) A. —Consultations with other officers.

———Impropriety of.

It is one of the elementary principles of administration of justice that a judicial officer, who is called upon to decide a matter in controversy, must exercise his own independent judgment, after hearing the parties concerned. It is the privilege as well as the duty of the presiding officer of a Court of Justice to form his own opinion on the point before him and to act accordingly. He ought not, as if it were, to mortgage his mind to another officer and to seek instructions from the latter, whenever he is called upon to decide a difficult or important matter. A Magistrate who does so, abdicates his proper functions and discloses a lamentable lack of sense of responsibility. (Tek Chand.) CHIRANJI LAL v. CROWN. 111 I.C. 319=9 Lah. 537=29 Cr. JUDICIAL OFFICER — Intervention by superiors.

—Contempt.

———Need for special protection.

A Judge by reason of his office is precluded from entering into controversy in the columns of the public press. Whether the comments be of a permissible or of an improper character, he cannot enter the arena and do battle with his adversary upon equal terms. The Judge of a superior Court is moreover precluded by considerations of decency from having recourse to the remedy available to any other citizen, of whom defamatory words are spoken or written, of taking proceedings for libel or slander before the ordinary tribunals which are subject to his own jurisdiction and he requires therefore in the exercise of his office a special protection in order that his authority and dignity may be maintained. —Duty of Magistrate.

———Magistrate should not allow his executive zeal to outrun judicial discretion.

It is one of the most important duties of a Court of law to create and maintain confidence in the administration of justice and to conduct itself in such a manner as to produce in the minds of the parties an impression that nothing but absolute justice would be done to them.

Where a Magistrate declined to summon all the witnesses cited on behalf of the accused and took upon himself the duty of arbitrarily selecting only a few witnesses who were to be summoned to give evidence for the defence, adjourned the case for hearing at an out of the way place and continued the hearing in spite of High Court's order directing the Magistrate to give every reasonable facility to the accused to produce his defence evidence, and to hold the trial of the case either at the headquarters of the district or at a place which is either a railway station or easily accessible from a railway station and on closure of the case, called the accused and his counsel in the middle of the night and pronounced judgment at 1 A.M. inflicting upon the convict the maximum term of imprisonment permissible,

Held, that the proceedings taken by the Magistrate show that he did not hear the case with that judicial detachment which should characterise the trial of a criminal case, and that he allowed his executive zeal to outrun his judicial discretion. (Shadi Lal, C.J.). TAJ MOHAMMAD v. EMPEROR. 107 I. C. 100=29 P. L. R. 14= 29 Cr L.J. 212=9 A.I.Cr.R. 505= A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 125.

—Intervention by superiors.

———Invocation of, not allowed.

The elementary principle of justice is that a person cannot simultaneously perform the functions of a prosecutor and those of a Judge in a criminal case. A Magistrate ceases to be an executive officer when he is sitting in Court to try a criminal case, and thus he cannot be allowed to invoke the intervention of his superior executive officers in a matter concerning the discharge of his judicial duties for which he owes responsibility only to the High Court. JUDICIAL OFFICERS PROTECTION ACT (XVIII of 1850).

—S. 1—Strictures in order against pleader.

A notice and an order containing libel were written by the defendant, a judicial officer, and served on the plaintiff, a pleader owing to a difference of opinion which had arisen between the plaintiff and the defendant in the course of a suit in which the plaintiff was acting as a pleader in a suit. The defendant objected to the conduct of the plaintiff acting as such pleader and called upon him to apologise. The plaintiff did not apologise, and in consequence of his refusal the defendant addressed a further communication to the District Judge.

Held, that the Judge in dealing with the conduct of the pleader was certainly acting in discharge of his judicial duty, and he was therefore protected from any liability to be sued in a Civil Court.

Even if it were assumed that he had exceeded the limits of propriety to gratify his own spite, he was protected by the Act, and the remedy for the complainant would be to report the matter to a higher authority. It is an elementary principle of law that if a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter its judgments and orders are mere nullities and might not only be set aside at any time by the Court in which they are rendered, but be declared void in every Court in which they are presented. If a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter its judgments and orders are mere nullities and may be declared void by every Court in which they are presented. If it has no power to determine the cause its authority is wholly usurped and its judgment and orders are the exercise of arbitrary power under the forms but without the sanction of the law. ———Decision of Revenue Court obtained by fraud—Suit in Civil Court for declaration that it does not affect plaintiff's rights will lie.

A civil Court has no jurisdiction to set aside the proceedings in a Revenue Court, but it has jurisdiction to declare that the conduct of the parties to the suit in obtaining orders in their favour, has been, in fact, fraudulent and that the plaintiff's interest, if any, in the property in suit is not affected by any decision so fraudulently obtained. No possible ground can be imagined either in law or equity or common sense for the conclusion that, if a person has really been deceived, he cannot sue in a Civil Court to establish the facts in his own favour and to obtain a declaration of the assertion of his true rights to which he has succeeded or which he has inherited. ——Acts of State—Agreement between High Contracting Parties on cession of territories—General statement to preserve existing rights—Municipal Courts—Right to adjudicate.

When a territory is acquired by a sovereign state for the first time that is an Act of State. It matters not how the acquisition has been brought about. It may be by conquest, it may be by cession following on treaty, it may be by occupation of territory hitherto unoccupied by a recognised ruler. In all cases the result is the same. Any inhabitant of the territory can only make good in the Municipal Courts established by the new sovereign such rights as that sovereign has, through his officers, recognised. Such rights as he had under the rule of predecessors avail him nothing. Nay more, even if in a treaty of cession it is stipulated that certain inhabitants should enjoy certain rights that does not give a title to these inhabitants to enforce these stipulations in the Municipal Courts. The right to enforce remains only with the High Contracting Parties.

Where Scindia of Gwalior ceded certain districts in exchange for other districts to the British Government and both parties agreed to maintain intact rights of private subjects, on suit by certain persons for a declaration that they were Talukdars.

Held, the whole object of enquiry is to see whether after cession, the British Government has conferred or acknowledged as existing the proprietary right which the plaintiffs claimed. The view of the officials of the Government as to documents would influence them to make up their minds as to what title should be given or recognised, but even then it is what they did after investigation, not what they thought at investigation, that is matter of moment; a mere general statement that existing rights would be upheld could never prevail against exact determinations. Any statement in general terms that rights will be respected must necessarily mean as these rights are on investigation determined by the Government officials. To suppose that by such general statements in a proclamation the Government renounced their right to acknowledge what they thought right and conferred on the Municipal Court the rights to adjudicate as upon the rights which existed before cession, is to misapprehend the law as above set forth. Where upon abandonment of a holding by a tenant it has been jointly cultivated by the co-sharers, subsequent dispossession of the plaintiff by the defendant would entitle the plaintiff to maintain a suit for recovery of joint possession in the Civil Court. He is entitled to obtain joint possession of the land which is the joint property of the parties. ———Dispute between rival tenants—Suit for a declaration with the object of avoiding the Tenancy

JURISDICTION—Civil and Revenue Courts—Tenancy suits.

Act—'Exclusive jurisdiction of Revenue Courts'—Doctrine of.

It is a truism to say that a suit for a declaration between two rival tenants may be brought in a Civil Court, though in the more recent rulings of High Court, the doctrine of the "exclusive jurisdiction" of the Revenue Courts in certain matters has been developed, and emphasis directed to the wording of S. 167 which says "no Court other than a Court of Revenue shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which a suit lies under the 4th Schedule."

If the object of the suit is really to prejudice, if possible, the rights which the defendant rival tenant or the zemindar may have, and which if they wish to establish, they must have recourse to the Revenue Court, i.e., if it is an attempt to evade the provisions of the Tenancy Act, it offends against provisions of S. 167 of the Act.

Under S. 167 of the Tenancy Act, it is beyond the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to make a declaration. The Civil Court cannot investigate even much less find on the allegations of the plaintiffs that he is for one reason or another, an occupancy tenant, nor for the same reasons can it decide whether the defendants are permanent lessees. —— General principle.

If a decree is passed ex parte by a Court which had no jurisdiction to try it, the defendant, judgment-debtor, can challenge it on the ground that it was passed by a Court which had no jurisdiction. The general principle is that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of the parties and any waiver on their part cannot make for the lack or defect of the jurisdiction. 38 Cal. 639, Rel. on. (Misra, J.). ——The provisions of S. 137, Cr. P. Code are imperative and failure to comply with them vitiates the order, when the opposite party appears before the Magistrate, shows cause and alleges that what was claimed as a public pathway was not so, the Magistrate should record evidence on the matter of the complaint as in a summons case. He is not justified in consenting to act so to say, as an arbitrator and to decide the matter simply after a local inspection. Consent of the parties or waiver does not vest him with a jurisdiction to proceed in such a manner. 21 C.W.N. 926, Rel. on. (Iqbal Ahmad, J.). Where a Judge is not competent to try a suit or hear an appeal, it is not open to the parties to give the Judge a jurisdiction by apparently submitting to it. 9 All. 191 (P.C.), Expl. But there may be cases in which jurisdiction depends on certain allegations of facts and where those facts have been established and have been accepted by a Court and on foot of those facts a judgment has been delivered, a party is not at liberty to question the jurisdiction of the Court. 37 M.L.J. 349, Rel. on. In such cases the facts which give the Court jurisdiction are facts to be established by evidence and it is open to a Court to come to a conclusion on the evidence. —Co-ordinate.

——Declaration that certain order of Board of Revenue is ultra vires cannot be granted.

Where a question of proprietary or under-proprietary right is involved the Civil Courts have full jurisdiction to determine it and to grant such relief as may be appropriate to the case. But the Civil Courts do not exist for the purpose of reviewing the decision of the Revenue Courts or deciding on their validity. The two classes of Courts are Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and the Civil Courts have no power to control or supervise the decisions of the Revenue Courts except in so far as such power is given them by law. A declaration that an order of the Board of Revenue assessing rent on a certain area held by the plaintiff is ultra vires, and inoperative against him cannot be granted by itself apart from any question of proprietary right. 1 O.L.J. 344 and 23 O.C. 342, Foll. (Daniels, J.C.). ——Concurrent proceedings for similar relief—Procedure explained.

Two points appear to be usual on considering whether the Court should have regard and defer to a jurisdiction with which it may come in conflict or whether the Court can fairly expect that other jurisdiction to defer to it. One is the priority in time and the other is the extent of the relief asked for or obtainable in the other jurisdiction. It is for the Court to say that the action is a collusive action and to recall the order made by it for the appointment of a Receiver. It is of the utmost importance that where concurrent proceedings for similar relief are taken in two different and independent Courts, no order should be passed which may lead to friction or conflict of jurisdiction. No other Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction or independent jurisdiction can treat it as of no effect in an interlocutory proceeding. (Doss and Ross, JJ.). ——Material issue should not be decided for considering whether it has jurisdiction.

The Court for the purpose of considering whether it has jurisdiction or not cannot decide a material issue in the case. In order to find out whether the claim of the plaintiff is bona fide or not, when a plaintiff claims two items of property and the defence is that there is some dispute as regards one item of the property and the other item has been included in the plaint only to give jurisdiction to a higher Court, the Court would not be justified in deciding whether the plaintiff has a title to the other item, and whether the Court would have jurisdiction if the other item was excluded. The mere fact that the claim to the other item is untenable is not a sufficient reason for the Court to say that the claim is an inflated claim and the suit should have been filed in a Court of lower monetary jurisdiction. 21 Mad. 271, Rel. on; 8 Bom. 31, Dist. (Devadoss, J.). Jurisdiction in relation to the proceedings of a Court means the authority of a Court to decide a particular cause or matter. Where the authority exists, the proceedings are binding on the parties until set aside by some process known to the law.

JURISDICTION—Exercise of.

They cannot be set aside or disregarded in a collateral proceeding. There is fundamental distinction between existence of jurisdiction and exercise of jurisdiction, and those proceedings only can be declared null and void and therefore disregarded which have been conducted by a Court not having any authority to conduct them; but where the complaint is as to the mode in which the jurisdiction has been exercised the appropriate procedure provided for the removal of the grievance must be pursued if the complainant is to have any remedy for the injury done or supposed to be done to him. ———Effect or meaning of Court having jurisdiction to entertain suit explained.

A Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit has also jurisdiction to decide it whether the decision on the merits be right or not. If it has decided wrongly, the only remedy for the aggrieved party is to take steps prescribed by law for setting it aside, either by means of an appeal or revision or, where the law provides such a remedy, by means of a fresh suit. Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine and it does not depend either upon the regularity of the exercise of that power or upon the correctness of the decision pronounced, for the power to decide necessarily carries with it the power to decide wrongly as well as rightly. An irregular exercise of jurisdiction does not render the order made in the case without jurisdiction and such orders regularly made must be set aside and cannot be challenged in a collateral proceeding. ———Contract—Submission clause—Party bringing suit in violation of—Procedure explained.

The jurisdiction of a Court is not taken away either by a submission clause in a contract, or by the existence of arbitration proceedings the right of a party to seek the assistance of the Courts is unrestricted, and the Courts will not permit their jurisdiction to be ousted.

As the jurisdiction of the Courts is not to be ousted, whenever a party to a submission brings an action in respect of any matter that he has contracted to refer he may be liable to damages for the violation of his contractual obligation, but the Court that has seisin of the suit, is the only Tribunal for the time being invested with the jurisdiction to decide the rights of the parties and the arbitrators become functus officio, and their authority to deal with the dispute abates.

JURISDICTION—Pecuniary.

When a party to a contract files a suit in respect of any matter that he has contracted to refer to a private tribunal, the Court is not ousted of its jurisdiction to try the suit. It is open to the other party to apply for stay of the suit on the ground of the contractual liability to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration and the Court may in a proper case hold its hand and refuse to proceed with the trial of the suit. But in the event of no application being made to the Court for a stay of the suit, the Court that has seisin of the disputes between the parties can proceed to adjudicate upon them and its decision is binding upon the parties.

The Court in which the suit is filed acquires seisin of the suit immediately on its institution, and its jurisdiction to try it cannot remain suspended till such time as an application for stay of the suit has been made to it and it decides whether it should proceed with the suit or not. ——Vancouver Island Settlers Rights Act (1904), S. 3—Lieutenant Governor in Council should act judicially in deciding a question under S. 3—But he is not bound by technical rules of evidence or procedure—Exercise of discretion—No interference by logal proceedings.

The statute of 1904 requires that before the authority to issue a Crown grant under S. 3 is acted upon the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall decide the question whether or not there is "reasonable proof" or "improvement" or occupation and of intention to reside and the function of the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council in deciding upon such question is judicial in the sense that he must "preserve a judicial temper" and perform his duties "conscientiously with a proper feeling of responsibility" whether or not the proof advanced is " reasonable proof " is a question of fact for the designated tribunal, and the decision by the Lieutenant Governor in Council in the affirmative cannot be questioned in any Court so long as it is not demonstrated that there was no "proof" before him which acting judicially, he could regard as reasonably sufficient. The Lieutenant Governor-in-Council is not bound by the technical rules of British Columbia law touching the reception of hearsay evidence and there is nothing necessarily incompatible with the judicial character of the inquiry in the fact that such evidence is received.

JURISDICTION—Presumption.

Where there is some evidence in support of the application and there is no adequate reason for holding that this evidence might not be properly considered to be reasonably convincing, the grant made by the Lieutenant Governor in-Council cannot be questioned. As to matters touching the refusal to direct the production of the deponents in support of the application for grant for cross-examination and the refusal to grant an adjournment for the purpose of the opposite party to adduce evidence in opposition to the application, where the opposite party were given the fullest opportunity to present before the Lieutenant Governor in Council everything they might desire to urge against the view that the depositions produced in themselves constituted "reasonable proof" and that they had the fullest opportunity also of supporting their contention that the depositions alone in the absence of cross-examination ought not to be considered sufficient and that further time should be allowed to enable them to prepare their case.

Held, that the appointed authority for dealing with the matter, was the executive Government of the province directly answerable to the Legislature and that the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council was not bound to govern himself by the rules of procedure regulating proceedings in a Court of Justice.

Where it cannot be suggested that they proceeded without any regard to the rights of the respondents the procedure followed must be presumed, in the absence of some conclusive reason to the contrary to have been adopted in the exercise of his discretion under the statute as a proper mode of discharging the duty entrusted to him. His decision taken in the exercise of that discretion are final and not reviewable in legal proceedings. The proper course for him to take is again to apply to the revenue Court for assistance to eject the tenant under S. 60 of the Oudh Rent Act, and as long as that has not been done, the landlord is not entitled to treat the tenant as a trespasser and to sue for his ejectment in the Civil Court. 1890 S. The Rent Court has no jurisdiction in the matter where the land in dispute is situated in Cantonments which are under the direct administration of the Government of India. The Tenancy Act does not apply in the case. But where the owner of the land asserts proprietary title, the appeal necessarily lies to the District Judge. Section 197 of the Tenancy Act has thus application and as all the material necessary for determination was before the High Court, it was justified in disposing of the appeal as if the suit had been in fact instituted in a civil Court. If the defendant were held to be estopped from contending that the suit was exempted from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court, merely because he had not admitted the commission of any offence, the result would be that the plaintiff would always be entitled to prefer a second appeal if the decision went against him, but the defendant would be estopped from doing so. JURISDICTION—What determines.

——Objection to inherent jurisdiction only, cannot be waived, but irregularities in initial procedure can be waived.

It is a settled principle that where a Court has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit no waiver on the part of the defendant can confer jurisdiction upon it. But where the Court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter, but there are irregularities in the initial procedure, the defendant who without objection goes to trial upon the merits cannot subsequently dispute the jurisdiction of the Court. Section 99, C.P. Code, embodies the rule. The exceptions to the rule are contained inter alia in S. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act and S. 21 of the C. P. Code. JURISDICTION—Miscellaneous.

———It is perfectly clear on all hands that when a suit is filed in a Civil Court the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court is primarily determined by the valuation which the plaintiff puts upon the subject-matter of the suit. It is open to a defendant when he appears to answer the suit to raise the plea that the suit has not been properly valued and to show if he can that the Court in which the suit has been brought has no jurisdiction to try it. ———Initial forum depends upon plaintiff's suit as framed.

The jurisdiction of a Court to entertain and decide upon a cause of action depends upon the nature of the claim put forward by the plaintiff as his cause of action and the matter involved in it does not depend upon what the defendants may assert by way of defence. It may turn out at the trial that the subject of contest between the plaintiff and defendant is not properly represented by the form in which the plaintiff has chosen to put his claim, but the occurrence of that contingency may only render the plaintiff's suit liable to be dismissed as not proved. —Different systems of.

——Comparative jurisprudence—Systems are not identical but comparative study is useful.

In all civilized systems of jurisprudence there are many common principles and many historical processes of development which are very similar, and light may often be thrown from one system upon another, but when this is done the comparison must be handled with care. There is a special danger with a Court constituted mainly of Judges trained under the English systems of a too hasty assumption that some foreign system is in a particular matter identical.

Still the exception given by the Roman Law required the double condition not only that the property should be sold but that it should be delivered, though the delivery might be presumed by a fiction however, in this particular case the Roman-Dutch Law as administered in Ceylon has made a further stride. Tradition, whether actual or symbolic, is no longer necessary for consummation of a sale of immovable property, and has been replaced by the delivery of the deed. 3 Sup. Ct. —S. 7 (2) (substituted by S. 4 (2) of Amendment Act VI of 1924)—Interpretation.

——'Being or becoming registered.'

The word "becoming" has been deliberately used in contradistinction to the word "being" and is intended to connote something different to that which would be conveyed by the word "being". The words "becoming registered" mean "in the process of registration" as contrasted with the words "being registered" which refer to an act previous to the election. Hence, if an Association takes the necessary steps to have itself registered under the law for the time being in force before the election is held, though the registration may not become an accomplished fact before the date of the elections, yet there would be sufficient compliance with the terms and conditions as prescribed in sub-S. 2 to S. 4. —S. 15—Interest.

——Meaning of.

The word "interest" in S. 15 means a material interest and not merely a sentimental interest such as a father may have in the prosperity of his son. The word cannot also mean a very remote or speculative advantage. The interest which a paid manager of a firm or its salaried servant may have in either obtaining a contract for the benefit of his company or in executing it is not such an interest as would disqualify him for his appointment as Port Trustee. But where a salaried manager receives also a commission or bonus on the total profits of the business done by the Company, he would be disqualified from being a Port Trustee, but if the Company is a Joint Stock Company such person would be exempted from the disqualification. —S. 46—Position of trustees.

——The position of the trustees of the Port of Karachi is that of statutory bailees having certain rights against and owing certain duties to both the shipowners and the holders of the bills of lading. The onus therefore lies on the shipowners to show that the trustees, either under the statute or in consequence of any act subsequently done by them, hold goods as bailees solely on behalf of the holders of the bills of lading and that they had no remedy whatsoever against the shipowners. ——It is not that as soon as the free days have expired the right of the trustees against the ship comes to an end, and they may only look up to the owner of the goods for further charges and that also provided they comply with the procedure laid down in cl. This contention he tried to prove by showing marks on certain of the bundles.

Held, that the contention was of no value as against the owner of ship as under the bill of lading they were not responsible for marks or counter marks and it is equally of no value as against the trustees as they were not parties to the bill of lading. 18 S.L.R. 106, Rel. on. (Rupchand, A.J.C.). —Vol. II, Ch. VI, Para. 67—Procedure in warrant cases.

——Long list of witnesses filed by accused—Court may refuse to summon but cannot order accused to pay for their costs.

The ordinary procedure in warrant cases is that the costs of causing the attendance of accused's necessary witnesses is usually borne by Government. The Magistrate has no doubt authority to depart from this usual practice, but there should be strong and cogent reasons for making the departure. Where the Magistrate finds that the accused has given a long list of witnesses to defeat or delay the ends of justice, he may decline to compel their attendance, under sub S. (1), but at the same time he must be careful not to do any act which might hamper the accused in his defence. The Court should, in a case of this kind, adopt a reasonable course which would, while avoiding any hardship on either side, promote the ends of justice. (Shadi Lal, C.J.). —Privy Council, interference by.

——In connexion with proper value to be allowed for compulsorily acquired land, Privy Council cannot interfere with the figures that have been settled by the High Court unless it can be shown that there has been some real mistake in law or palpable omission which would invalidate the valuation. —Toka lands.

——Toka lands—Apportionment of value between Government and Toka tenants—It is not possible to lay down any fixed rule.

Considering the varying nature of the Toka lands, it is out of question to attempt to rule that in every case where Toka land is acquired by Government, the rate of assessment which it is expected Government would levy In 1929 when the 50 years' period expires, is a certain percentage of the present value of the land, because the rate to be now fixed on the present value of the land must be determined in such case according to the prospects which the land has of improving or decreasing in value, and other varying circumstances. In respect of land held under the Toka tenure the right of Government to increase the Toka rent is not subject to any specific limitation. A declaration by Government of its present policy cannot affect the apportionment to be made by the Court as of the date when the land was notified. Also it is useless to inquire into what a purchaser of Government rights in Toka land would give for such rights, or what a present owner of Toka land would put by at the present moment in order to secure his position in 1919 when the previous settlement came to an end. All such calculations are themselves purely fanciful, and do not in any way assist the Court in arriving at a conclusion which itself can only be based on pure speculation. They merely delude the Court into thinking that it has arrived at a conclusion, not on speculation but on sound reasoning. The Court has to decide the views of Government, and no doubt has to consider that Government are entitled at the end of the period to re-assess the land at a rate entirely within their discretion, and the views of the claimants, the present owners, who may consider that they have rights in the nature of occupancy rights which would entitle them to pay something less than a rack-rent, which otherwise Government would charge on the basis that the lands were liable to be resumed at the end of the period. It is certainly desirable in all these cases that Court should avoid as far as possible fanciful speculation which can be of no assistance towards fixing a figure which is itself a matter of speculation. —English case-law.

——Per Dalal, J.—The principles of English cases are applicable to the Indian Act.

Per Walsh, Ag.J.C.—It may possibly lead to misunderstanding to seek guidance from the English decisions. except in so far as it is necessary to explain ambiguous provisions of the Indian statute. It is clearly wrong to follow an English decision where doing so would involve doing violence to a statutory provision in the Indian Act. ——Government having right to assess land—Land can be notified for acquisition—No fixed rule as to apportionment between Government and actual holder.

Where Government has no proprietary interest in the land to be acquired but has only a right to levy assessment, with perhaps the additional right to increase the assessment according to certain conditions, the land can be notified for acquisition by Government. 12 Bom. L. R. 34, Ref. No universal rule can be laid down prescribing the share of Government in the compensation money, but the area of the land, its position, the nature of its user, and all other circumstances which would relate to the possibility of Government fixing the next assessment have to be taken into consideration. —S. 3 (f)—Public purpose.

——Even if only a section of the public is benefited, still the purpose is a public one; the expression includes a purpose in which the general interests of the community, as opposed to the particular interests of the individuals, is directly and vitally concerned. The purpose of providing the panchamas and other coolies of Tanjore with house sites is therefore a "public purpose" within the meaning of S. 4. If the effect of the Government order is to enable it to acquire a particular house site for a particular individual, it is only a matter of detail, which does not affect the general question of the purpose being a public one. —S. 3 (f)—" Village sites."

—S. 4—Public purpose.

——"Public purpose"—Provision of house-sites for Panchamas—Proviso to S. 6 not fulfilled—Objection before final declaration—Maintainability—Compensation " out of public revenue "—Payment of cost by grantees at future date—Validity of declaration.

Provision of house-sites for Panchamas is a "public purpose" within S. 4 of the Land Acquisition Act. Even if only a section of the public is benefited, still the purpose is a public one. The validity of a declaration under S. 6, sub-S. (1) cannot be called in question before the declaration is in fact made. To find out if the requirement of the proviso to S. 6 has been fulfilled, the Court should have regard to the state of things at the time of the declaration. Its validity cannot be made to depend upon some future contingent event. Where the Government proposed to acquire house-sites by advancing 80 per cent. of the cost in the first instance and recover the same from the grantees of the sites in the course of the next twenty years.

Held, the condition in the proviso to S. 6 (1) was fulfilled. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.). SECRETARY OF STATE v. GOPALA AIYAR. A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 798=59 M.L.J. 274.

—S. 4—Scope.

——The intention of the Government amending the Act was that it should only apply to cases of lands which might appear to Government after the Act came into force, to be needed or likely to be needed for any public purpose. (Macleod, C.J. and Coyajee, J.). NUR MOHOMED v. SECY. OF STATE. 96 I.C. 329=28 Bom. L.R. 582=A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 369.

—S. 6—Acquisition for quarries.

——Where Government publishes a declaration of its intention to acquire a certain area of land for public purpose, viz., for quarries in particular part of country in connexion with construction of certain building work, and inserts in it the statement contained in S. 3 (1), Land Acquisition (Mines) Act, 1885, the effect of the statement is, that only so much of the minerals would be acquired as might be necessary in the construction of the work. Lord Provost and Magistrates of Glasgow v. Farie, 13 A.C. 657 and Midland Ry. Co. v. Robinson, 15 A.C. 19, Ref. (Ross and Chatterji, JJ.). SECY. OF STATE v. GYANENDRA CHANDRA PANDE. 8 Pat. 742=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 112.

—S. 6—Contents of declaration.

——It is not necessary that the declaration should on its face show that the acquisition is to be made out of the public revenue; S. 6 proviso, does not say so. (Krishnan, J.). KANTIMAHANTI RAMAMURTHI v. SPECIAL DEPUTY COLLECTOR, VIZAGAPATAM. 99 I.C. 530=1926 M.W.N. 968=A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 114.

—S. 6—Contribution by Government.

——Where only 20 per cent. of the cost of acquisition was furnished by the future owners, and the remaining 80 per cent. the Government provided in the first instance, the recovery of which was to be made by instalments during the course of 20 years,

Held, that the conditions of the proviso were fulfilled because in construing the proviso what the Courts must have regard to is the state of things at the time of the declaration. A. I. R. 1930 Mad. 248, Foll. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.). SECY. OF STATE v. N. GOPALA AIYAR. A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 798.

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (1894), S. 6—Contribution by private persons.

——Where 20 per cent. of the cost of acquisition of certain lands for building sites is to be levied in the first instance from the private parties and 80 per cent. should be first paid by the Government to be subsequently recouped from the private parties to whom the lands are to be assigned, the provisions of S. 6 (1), proviso, are substantially complied with in that, part of the acquisition costs had to come out of the public revenues at the time of acquisition. A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1009, Expl.; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 245, Ref. (Sundaram Chetty, J.). SECY. OF STATE v. MURUGESAN. 1929 M.W.N. 779=A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 248.

——Compensation of one anna contributed by Government is sufficient to render declaration valid.

Even where the Government contributes towards the payment of compensation for a piece of land acquired under the Act only one anna out of the public revenue the remainder being paid by private contributions, compensation has been paid partly out of the public revenue, within the meaning of the proviso and the declaration made under S. 6, Cl. (1) is valid. Chatterton v. Cave, (1878) 3 A. C. 483 and 18 Cal. 99 (P.C.), Dist.; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1099, Diss. from. (Odgers and Madhavan Nair, JJ.). SENGA NAICKEN v. SECY. —S. 6—Contribution by private persons.

——Payment of a particle only from public revenues is not sufficient compliance — Contributions from private individuals through public bodies may become part of public revenue—Money paid by private individual into public treasury for being paid as compensation money does not become public revenue.

The Legislature, when they provided that a part of the compensation should be paid from public revenues, did not mean that this condition would be satisfied by payment of a particle, e. g., one anna in Rs. 5,985. Chatterton v. Cave, (1878) 3 A.C. 483, Rel. on.

Government, or a Local Body like the District Board might receive contributions from private individuals and might spend the same upon public purposes, and such gratuitous contributions may be included in and become part of the public revenues under S. 6. But when money is paid into a Government Treasury by the hand of one private individual for the purpose of being used as compensation to be paid for the acquisition of land and after passing intact through the Treasury is paid out into the hand of another private individual it cannot with any accuracy be described as becoming part of the public revenues. Government has no absolute disposing power over it. Such money is not revenue due to Government on any land, nor is it any cess, tax, duty, custom or other due recoverable under Act 2 of 1864. (Spencer and Ramesam, JJ.). PONNAIA v. SECY. OF STATE. 97 I.C. 471=24 M.L.W. 513=A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 1099=51 M.L.J. 338.

—S. 6—Effect of declaration.

———Declaration under Cl. (3) is conclusive.

The construction of a public road is prima facie a public purpose. Under S. (6), Cl. LAND ACQUISITION ACT (1894), S. 6—Whether ultra vires.

—S. 6—Piecemeal acquisition.

———Single holding—Piecemeal acquisition is illegal but where acquisition is interrupted it can be resumed afterwards.

A declaration may be issued for a quantity of land consisting of several holdings belonging to different owners. It is thus often necessary to make separate awards for different portions of the land covered by a single declaration. There is no objection to separate proceedings being taken in respect of separate holdings. It is however a different matter where there is one holding. In such a case there can be no piecemeal acquisition.

Where the Collector, in obedience to the decision of a Court to which he was subject, desisted, pending an appeal from that decision, from proceeding with the acquisition of the portion of the premises affected by that decision, he is not thereby debarred from further proceeding with the acquisition when a Court, superior to that which gave the decision, declared the latter to be erroneous. —S. 6—Public purpose.

———Government is the proper authority to decide.

The Government is the proper authority for deciding what a public purpose is. When the Government declares a certain purpose to be a public purpose, it must be presumed that the Government is in possession of facts which induce the Government to declare that the purpose is a public purpose. —S. 6—Time for objections.

———When only a preliminary notification has been published under S. 4, and the further stage of making declaration under S. 6 has not yet reached, it is premature to question the propriety of the Government's action, on the ground that it offends against the proviso to S. 6, because it is only the final declaration that can be called in question. —S. 6—Want of bona fides.

———If the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act are not strictly complied with, but are made a cloak for attempting to obtain a transfer of an indefeasible title under the guise of a public purpose, the proceedings do not operate towards the creation of a valid title to the land in Government. 18 Cal. 99 (P. ——Person asked to appear before Collector—Person appearing but filing petition only on following day is sufficient compliance with notice.

A notice was served upon a party under S. 9 of the Act directing him to appear before the Collector on a certain date. The party appeared before the Collector on that date. What passed on that day was open to doubt. A petition in writing was filed on the following day before the Collector had made his award.

Held, that the petition filed on the following day in Court must be regarded as a sufficient compliance with the notice under S. 9 of the Act or alternatively that the circumstances disclosed a sufficient reason for allowing the party to come in under cl. (3) of S. 25. 12 C.W.N. 263, Dist. (Richardson and Shamsul-Huda, JJ.). GYANENDRA NATH v. SECY. OF STATE. 61 I.C. 532=25 C.W.N. 71=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 234.

—S. 9—Construction of notice.

——A notice was issued to A under Ss. 9 (2) and 10 as follows: "The Government are going to acquire lands mentioned in the list hereunder under Act (1) (India) of 1894. You shall appear either in person on 26th October, 1925, before me at Nannilam Camp or by an authorized agent and inform the nature of the right you possess in these lands, the amount due to you out of the amount of compensation to be given for the said right, and objections if any in respect of the measurements made according to S. 8. You should prepare a written statement and the same signed either by you or by your authorised agent should be presented." The notice then called for particulars required under S. 10. It was contended that the notice did not call upon A to state his claim to compensation.

Held, that the notice was clearly in accordance with the provisions of S. 9. No other construction could be put upon the notice except that it was a notice calling upon A to claim an amount of compensation due to him for such interest as he possessed in the land under acquisition. LAND ACQUISITION ACT (1894), S. 9—Waiver.

—S. 9—Non-compliance.

——S. 9 not strictly followed as regards service of notice—Claimant can claim compensation before Court.

If the provisions of S. 9 have not been strictly followed as regards the service of notice, then it would be absolutely wrong to prevent the claimant from asking for proper compensation on a reference made by the Collector to the Court under the Land Acquisition Act. In such a case it is not possible to apply the penal provisions of S. 25 in order to prevent the claimant from putting forward his claim before the Court. 34 Cal. 470; 30 Cal. 576 and 1 C.W.N. 562, Ref. (*B. Under S. 9 (3) the occupier of the land, concerning which public notice has been given under Cl. Where an application was presented to the Collector some days prior to his making an award to investigate the claims of different claimants but the same was enquired into after the award was made,

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (1894), S. 11—Award —What is.

Held, that Collector's adjudication after enquiry was without jurisdiction,

Held further, that the order passed on such application cannot be an order on an application for review or modification of the award since it was on an application presented before the award was made and therefore the Collector, if he was not able to pass orders upon that application before he made his award, should have referred the question to the Court under S. 30. —S. 11—Award, what is.

A proposal of the amounts to be awarded to the persons whose land is being acquired, drawn up by a Land Acquisition Officer after making the prescribed enquiry and under the instructions for the guidance of Acquiring Officer, submitted for approval to the Consulting Surveyor, does not amount to the making of an award within the meaning of S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act, and the proposal is not binding upon the Government or the parties interested.

Per Macleod, C.J.—The mere signing of a document by an Acquiring Officer, expressing his opinion as to the amount of compensation to be offered to persons whose land is being acquired does not amount to the making of an award within the meaning of S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act and has no binding effect where the officer himself does not intend the document to be final. Some further formality is required on general principles before it becomes binding on Government and this formality is prescribed by S. 12.

Per Shah, J.—An award, when made under S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act, becomes final and conclusive and although the section makes it obligatory that the award should be filed and this step when taken puts it beyond doubt that the award is made and is final and conclusive, it does not follow that an award can never be final and conclusive unless it is filed. If the parties before the institution of the proceedings contemplated by the Act, chose to agree, they are perfectly competent to do so and there is nothing whatever in the words of the Act to suggest that this power is thereby taken away. The fact that compulsory powers have been invoked in order to secure property from unwilling vendors, should not be regarded as denuding all parties of the rights they possessed before the proceedings began. The Collector in making a reference is only an agent of Government and he is not entitled to waive the requirements of the law on behalf of Government. The act of the Collector in acting on an application will not preclude the District Judge from holding that it was not in compliance with law.

Where the applications contained no request that the matter of the award should be referred for the determination of the District Judge, but they asked that the matter relating to compensation should be postponed until the final decision as to the propriety or legality of Government in acquiring the land had been settled by a competent Court and they mentioned that the amount of compensation awarded by the Collector was low and was not accepted,

The Land Acquisition Act creates a special jurisdiction and provides a special remedy. The jurisdiction of the Courts under the Act is a special one and is strictly limited by the terms of Ss. 18, 20 and 21. It only arises when a specific objection has been taken to the Collecsor's award and it is confined to a consideration of that objection. Once therefore it is ascertained that the only objection taken is to the amount of compensation, that alone is the "matter" referred and the Court has no power to determine or consider anything beyond it, e.g., question of measurement raised for the first time three years after references were duly made by Collector. LAND ACQUISITION ACT (1894),—S. 18—Powers of High Court

—S. 18—Limitation.

———Per Mukerji, J.—Limitation runs from the date of filing of award—Date of award is the date of filing award. (Niamatullah, J., contra.).

Per Mukerji J.—The expression "date of award" being indefinite the legislature meant the date of the filing of the award to be the date contemplated in Cl. (b), sub-S. (2), S. 18. If limitation is to start it ought to start from the date of the filing of the award and not from the making of it 22 Bom. L. R. 1136, Rel. on.

Per Niamatullah, J.—The date of the award is not the date on which it is filed. A comparison of Ss. 11 and 12 will show that the date of making an award is meant by the Act to be different from the date on which the award is to be filed. Section 18 (2) proviso refers to the former. The date of award is the date on which a formal declaration is made by the Collector of the amount of compensation and of the person to whom the same is payable. (Mukerji and Niamatullah, JJ.). Having made the reference it is not open for the Collector or the Secretary of State to say that the reference was wrongly made, although ground for saying so may be that the application was belated by the owner. ——Order refusing to refer to Civil Court is not revisable by High Court. (Case-law discussed).

High Court has no power under S. 115, C.P. Code or under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, to revise the order of a Collector acting under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act refusing to refer to the Court, an application under S. 18 of the same Act by a person interested, requiring him to refer the matter for the determination of the Court. When Collector acts under part III, of which S. 18 forms part, he is acting in a different capacity because he has there to decide certain things but no revision petition lies to High Court because he is not a Court at all. ——Refusal to make a reference—Revision does not lie.

High Court has not been given power to interfere with the proceedings of the Collector so that if he refuses to do what seems incumbent upon him under the provision of S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act High Court cannot direct him to make a reference and the proper remedy is either for the Legislature to give the High Court powers of superintendence over the Collector's proceeding under the Land Acquisition Act, or for the Government to draw the attention of their officers to the provisions of the Act and lay down rules for their guidance, if they have not already done so. No doubt as the expression "Person interested" in S. 3 (b) of the Land Acquisition Act includes "All the persons claiming an interest in the compensation to be made on account of the acquisition of the land under this Act," and under S. 18, Cl. 1, "any person interested who has not accepted the award may by written application to the Collector, require that the matter be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court, whether his objection be to measurement of the land, the amount of the compensation, the person to whom it is payable, or the apportionment of compensation among the persons interested", the Collector is bound to make a reference. But if he fails in the duty imposed upon him by that section the High Court has no power to direct him to perform it. The word 'Court' has not been defined in any Act of the Legislature, but it may be presumed that an officer, to be a 'Court' must be competent to make a judicial decision. ———Market value of undeveloped land—Frontage land—Valuation must be more or less a guess work—Wholesale and retail prices—Difference indicated.

In all cases where there is a large area of undeveloped land under acquisition, it is the market value of the undeveloped land which has to be considered, and it is too often forgotten that a purchaser of such land will ordinarily expect to make a large profit on the original outlay because in addition he will have further expenditure to make, and there will be the risk that it will be some time before he can dispose of the whole of the land.

Frontage land derives its value from the advantage of much higher rents being received from shopkeepers from the ground floors of the buildings raised thereon, than can be paid by the tenants of tenement buildings. Valuation cases must be dealt with just as much from the point of view of the hypothetical purchaser as of the claimant. The valuation itself must often be more or less a matter of guess work. But it is obviously wrong to fix upon a valuation which, judged by every day principles, no purchaser would be likely to give. A very simple method of valuing land wholesale from retail prices is to take anything between one-half and one-third, according to circumstances of the expected gross valuation, as the wholesale price. ———Potential uses should be considered—Advantages to owner and not to the promoters are material—Evidence of offers is admissible—Existence of right of pre-emption affects the value.

In assessing the value of lands compulsorily acquired, consideration has to be paid to all the potential uses to which the said land can be put. The basis on which compensation for lands taken is to be assessed is the value of the lands to the owner as it existed at the date of the notice and not their value, when taken, to the promoters, but all advantages which the land possesses, present or future, in the hands of the owners may be taken into consideration, and the owner is entitled to have the price assessed in reference to those advantages which would give the land greater value.

The owners are entitled to ask for compensation by estimating the market-value of the property not according to its present disposition but in the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owners could dispose of it. But in order to apply this principle the objector should have put forward a scheme showing how the site in question could have been developed.

Evidence of offers is admissible, but as an offer amounts merely to an expression of opinion on the part of the person making it, oral offers unsupported by any documentary evidence do not carry any weight or afford any assistance.

Existence of right of pre-emption in a locality also has an important bearing on the price. (Broadway and Fforde, JJ.). ABDUL RAHIM v. SECY. OF STATE. 97 I.C. 776=8 L.L.J. 363=

———Value of land in actual condition at the time with all existing advantages and possibilities determines compensation.

The principle upon which valuation of property compulsorily acquired should be measured is the value to the seller of the property in its actual condition at the time of expropriation with all its existing advantages and with its possibilities excluding any advantage due to the carrying out of the scheme for the purpose for which the property is compulsorily acquired.

which, from their different locality and the different possibilities of value due to their position were, in its judgment, inapplicable, and dealt with the case on hand by considering the value of the land immediately adjacent at the rear and excluded from the road as determined by actual sale, then assumed that the land in dispute was added with advantages of the frontage and thus fixed a value for the whole and then took the fractional value of this sum represented by the ratio of the area of the land in question to the entire block and gave to it the whole added value due to the frontage.

———Value in view of prospective uses (not remote) is to be considered but not the purpose of acquisition.

The owner is entitled to the value obtainable in open market for the land if put to its most lucrative use. Court may take into account not only the present purpose to which the land is applied, but also any other more beneficial purpose to which in the course of events at no remote period it may be applied. If the special value exists only for the particular purchaser who has obtained powers of compulsory purchase it cannot be taken into consideration in fixing the price. ———Compensation—Assessment—Special adaptability of the land must be considered—Principle of Act is to provide complete indemnity to owner.

Clauses 3 and 4 of section 23 provide that in determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired, the Court shall take into consideration the damage sustained by the person interested by reason of severing such land from his other land, and the damage sustained by reason of the acquisition injuriously affecting his other property. The assessment of the value of the land, regardless of the user for which it is specially fitted, cannot lead to an adequate award of the compensation for the loss sustained by the owner. The special adaptability of the land acquired cannot accordingly be altogether ignored in the determination of its market value. The owner cannot be placed in as favourable a position as he was in before the exercise of compulsory powers, unless such a sum is assessed as will enable him to replace the premises or lands taken, by other premises or lands which would be to him of the same value.

Per Buckland, J.—The intention of S. 23 is to provide a complete indemnity to a person whose land is compulsorily acquired. Any enhanced value which it may have by reason of the use to which it will be put after acquisition must, of course, be ignored. There are cases where land is used for a special purpose in conjunction with other lands of its owner which are injuriously affected by its acquisition and where the owner will be compelled by law to, or can, provide himself with other land capable of being adapted in such a way as to restore to his land injuriously affected, its former usefulness. One measure of the damage sustained by the acquisition injuriously affecting the other property is the difference between the sum awarded for the land acquired and the costs to the owner of providing himself with other land to be used in a manner similar to that in which the land acquired was used, plus the cost of adapting it to such use. Tribunals assessing compensation must take into account, not only the present purpose to which the land is applied, but also any other more beneficial purpose to which in the course of events it might within a reasonable period be applied, just as an owner might do if he were bargaining with a purchaser in the market. The value to be paid for is the value to the owner as it exists at the date of the taking such value consists in all advantages which the land possesses, present or future, but it is the present value alone of such advantages that falls to be determined. Too much importance must not be attached to evidence of offers in ascertaining the market value of land ; but the position is different where the question is, whether there is a market at all for a tract of land for use for a specified purpose. 10 Bom. In ascertaining market value of land the fact that it may be possibly used for building purposes, has to be remembered. But in small villages, in the case of sites situated at a distance from the residential quarters in a village, it may make no difference; where, whether the value is ascertained by capitalizing its agricultural income or by regarding it as one fit for building purposes does not make any substantial difference, or to put it in other words, where there is no extra value to be given to it, if used for building purposes, there is no question of distribution of this extra value between the zamindar and the tenant. 42 M. 644, Dist. (Ramesam and Jackson, JJ.). ——Higher value is under certain circumstances allowable by reason of advantage accruing from action taken by the Trust in respect of a neighbouring parcel acquired previously—"Market value of land" defined—Other sales are admissible in evidence to prove value.

The basis on which compensation for lands taken is to be assessed is the value of the lands to the owner as it existed at the date of the notice to treat and not their value when taken to the promoters. All advantages which the land possesses present or future in the hands of the owner may be taken into consideration. The owner is entitled to have the price assessed in reference to those advantages which will give the land the greatest value. The value of an owner's interest is not properly compensated by assessing the amount of pecuniary benefits obtained by past user in disregard of possible benefits in the future. The probability of a more profitable future use is one such advantage which may be taken into consideration. Thus land which may probably be used for building purposes must not be valued on the same basis as purely agricultural land. But although prospective value is a necessary element in the assessment of compensation such value must be entirely excluded where it would arise from the construction of the particular works authorised by the Act which gives compulsory powers.

——Market value is price reasonably to be expected by willing owner from willing purchaser—Genuine sales about the time of the notification are best evidence—Adaptability of agricultural lands as building sites must be considered—Offers are not very important as evidence.

It is not idle speculation or unpractical imagination that must rule estimates for the purpose of awarding compensation to the owner of land being compulsorily acquired, but it is prudent business considerations such as would prevail with an intending purchaser at the imaginary market which would have obtained if the land had been announced for sale at the time of its compulsory acquisition, that must have the greatest weight. Save by the adoption of such principles the operative effect of special adaptability or future utility of the land must not be estimated. The fairest and the most favourable basis on which compensation should be given to the owner is to take into account the estimate of the market value of the property in accordance with the most lucrative and advantageous way in which such land can be sold in open market at the time of acquisition.

In estimating the market value of the land the best evidence will be the evidence of genuine sales which took place about the time of the notification for acquisition either in respect of the same land or any portion thereof or the sale of lands exactly similar in all its circumstances to the sale of the land under compulsory acquisition. The evidence of offers should not be given much importance in ascertaining the market value of the land. The adaptability of agricultural lands as sites for building is an element to be taken into account in determining the value of the land being compulsorily acquired. But deductions must be made for the payment of the ordinary premium and revised assessment which may be leviable on conversion of agricultural lands into building sites.

On the whole, therefore, the market value of the land may be roughly described as the price that an owner who is willing but who is not obliged to sell the land might consistently with reason expect to get from a willing purchaser with whom he is bargaining for the sale and purchase of the land. 17 C. The Government have wide powers under the Act to deprive a man of his property and it is only fair that he should be recouped on a liberal scale. Any endeavours to unduly depreciate the value of properties that have to be acquired in order that Government may acquire as cheaply as possible should be condemned equally with the exaggerated valuations put by claimants. ———In case of valuation of large area of land values paid to the lands in the neighbourhood is the real guide—Various portions cannot be separately valued.

In a case of acquisition of land where a large area has to be valued it is impossible to fix the value of various portions of it at different rates on anything like approaching an accurate basis. The only way in which the market value can be arrived at is to judge from other sales what the whole land would have been likely to realize in the market. It is not possible to divide the whole into separate pieces and give one value to so much of front land, and divide again the interior land into separate portions and value them again at different rates. If a few of the frontage plots are sold for building purposes, that is no evidence that the remainder of the land can be sold for building purposes. The real test by which the market value can be arrived at is to gather from other sales what the whole land would have been likely to realise in the market about the time of acquisition. It is altogether wrong to assume that every square yard of land has a potential value, the present value of which is more than nominal. (Macleod, C. J. and Coyajee, J.). ———Market value is determined by sales in the vicinity.

The proper method of valuation is to determine the market value of the land as a whole having regard to the sales in the locality.

The mere fact that a parcel of land is bought by a speculator in land with the object of re-selling it at a profit is no ground for disregarding the sale in compensation cases under the Land Acquisition Act.

The expression "market value" means the value which a parcel of land would realise if sold in the market. The test then is the test of a sale in the market. The seller must be a willing seller; a forced sale affords no criterion of market value. The purchaser must be a prudent purchaser, that is, one who makes his offer after making necessary inquiries as to the value of the land. An offer made by one who knows nothing of the value of the land in the locality and who makes no inquiries about it, affords no test of market value. The essential feature of market value is, as the term imports, the value that could be realised on a sale in the open market. The market may be dull or brisk. ———Small plots purchased by neighbours fetching much higher value—Market value is the value of land laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way—Scheme must be actual.

It is a well-known fact that a purchaser may be willing to pay a sum far in excess of the real value for a small plot of land when that plot of land was needed by him in order to round off his own property or for some other such reason. The fairest and most favourable principle of compensation to the owners is to estimate the market value of the property not according to its present disposition but laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owners could dispose of it. Objectors can put forward a scheme showing how the site in question could have been developed by splitting it up in various plots. Scheme for such a development must be put forward and evidence must be led to show that there was any real demand for small houses or shops in the vicinity. The opinion of a Tahsildar based mainly on the objector's opinion as to the value and his claims made before the Tahsildar has practically no evidential value. (Broadway and Fforde, JJ.). SECY. Certain plots which were in hills and were chiefly valuable for the building stone of good quality underlying the surface were acquired by Government on 10th February, 1921. The claimant who had then started quarrying in some of the hills had purchased one of the plots in question on 30th November, 1919 for 7½ annas a square yard. The Assistant Judge decreed compensation to the claimant for all the land in question at 7½ annas a square yard. On appeal, the High Court reduced the award to Rs. 1,000 per acre on the ground that by February 1921 such circumstances as had existed from the middle of 1919 until the end of 1920 had begun to lose their force.

Held, that the High Court did not refer to any evidence supporting the conclusion. Such evidence as was given did not support the suggestion of any such change until the latter part of 1921. A Co-operative Insurance Society purchased a large tract of land and proceeded to develop the same by driving roads through it with a view to sell it in plots.

Originally the society had been devising schemes for the development of the property and were not aware of any scheme of the Calcutta Improvement Trust affecting their property but when they came to know of the scheme by which the Trust proposed to construct a hundred feet wide sewer road affecting their property they decided that their own scheme for the development of their own property should be made to run in co-operation with the scheme of the Trust. Some plots abutting on the land were sold by the society and the land was described as land kept fo " proposed drainage road of the Trust." Later on the declaration under S. 6, Land Acquisition Act was published in respect of the scheme of the Trust by which the strip of land left undisposed of the society together with other lands adjoining it were declared for acquisition.

Held, that the mere fact that the society knew before the date of declaration that the Improvement Trust was going to acquire the land for the purposes of building a road and therefore left it open and did no dispose of it by sale could not be considered a disposition of the land as a road. The real disposition of the land was that it was part of a scheme for the purpose of selling it in small plots to purchasers as building sites by driving roads through the area in order to give access to the plot. Errors in law, including errors in appreciating or applying the rules of evidence or the judicial methods of weighing evidence, are matters that can and will be dealt with on appeal by Privy Council, but when, a difference of opinion has occurred between two Indian Courts upon the number of rupees per yard to be allowed for a plotof land, as to which their Lordships can form no opinion of their own, it would be alike unprofitable and impracticable to embark on a comparison of the decisions of these Courts. In cases relating to the acquisition of land the whole matter, both of fact and law, is a proper subject of appeal in India, for their local knowledge and experience enable the Judges to form useful judgments upon the whole case. So the Privy Council will not review the decree of an Indian Appellate Court merely upon question of value, unless there appears to be error in law or miscarriage of justice. In an appeal from an award of District Judge in a land acquisition case, the appellant failed to file a copy of the award with the appeal. The appeal was filed in 1922. The decision of Lahore High Court in A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 438, under which the amendment to Land Acquisition Act in 1921 was interpreted making the filing of copy of award with appeal obligatory, was in 1925. The appellant's counsel applied during the hearing of the appeal in 1927 for an extension of time under S. 5, Lim. —S. 29—Khot and occupant.

———Occupant in possession of specific area of warkas.

In the case of warkas or bhati land in Salsette, it has been a recognised custom to divide the compensation between the occupant and the Khot in the proportion of 2 to 1. But that has been due to the fact that in the case of such lands it is extremely difficult to define and ascertain the value of the respective interests of the Khots and the occupants, with the result that a rough and ready method of division has been adopted for want of a better one. In many cases the claimants against the Khots can hardly be called occupants. The claims are based on the fact that they are occupants of certain defined plots of land for the purpose of cultivating them so that by reason of such rights as occupants, they are entitled to other rights over the adjacent lands either for the purposes of grazing or of gathering rab materials. It is not generally shown that in such cases the occupants of cultivated lands have any defined area of warkas or bhati lands allotted to them, and so in order to divide the compensation between the Khot and the persons who have the right of user, owing to their position as cultivators, it has been found a convenient compromise to divide the compensation between them in that proportion. But it is entirely different where you find a tenant in occupation of a defined area of land, and paying assessment for it. Then undoubtedly he has a right to possession of all that area. ———Land and buildings thereon owned separately —Principles of apportionment discussed.

The matters to be considered when land acquired and the buildings standing thereon are owned separately are (1) right of the owner of land to call upon the owner of buildings to remove the house. If the latter did remove the house, the value to him would be small, and in the ordinary course would be no more than what has been called "demolition value" viz., the value of the materials less the cost of removal; and if he did not remove the house he would lose it; (2) the possibility that (if the land had not been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act) the owner of the land would not have desired or required the removal of the house and might have been willing to pay to owners of the house more than the mere demolition value of the house. In other words, the owner of the land would be possible purchaser, who might be willing to give more for the house than anyone else as he was the owner of the land. (3) If the house owner were called upon to remove the house he would be entitled to a reasonable time for such removal and that during such time the land owner would be kept out of enjoyment of the land. Such dispute forms no part of the award, and it would indeed be strange, if a controversy between two people as to the nature of their respective interests in a piece of land, should enjoy certain rights of appeal, which would be wholly taken away, when the piece of land was represented by a sum of money, paid into Court. Where certain lands not governed by the Madras Estates Land Act in the possession of permanent tenants claiming under a document purporting to be a sale of the landlord's kudivaram interest for a cash consideration and an annual rent of Rs. 4 were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and the Court divided the compensation amount as between the landlord and tenant at 1/3 and 2/3rds but the tenants contended that out of the compensation amount the landlord was entitled to get only capitalized value of the annual rent at 20 years' purchase and that the balance of the compensation amount should be given to them,

Held, that as the landlord had parted only with the kudivaram interest in the land, retaining the melwaram interest with him he had not merely the right to receive the rent and consequently the apportionment by the Court below was not wrong in law. ———Right of—In open spaces in front of houses.

In Oudh, tenants residing in a village who are in enjoyment of the land in front of their houses, the title of which was with the landlord, are not entitled to put up structures on the land without the consent of the landlord. The landlord may not object to the tenant's use of the open land situate in the abadi of a village, of which he happens to be the proprietor, but that would not give a right to the tenants to put up structures upon that piece of land and the landlord would be legitimately entitled to his remedy if he claimed it by coming to the Court for a relief to the effect that the structures complained of may be demolished. ———Transferability—Custom—Onus.

In the case of a tenant being allowed to build a house on a site belonging to a zamindar in the village abadi, where there is no proof of any custom or contract to the contrary, the tenant has only a right to the house so long as he maintains it and is not entitled to transfer it. When a custom of its transferability is set up, it is on the tenant that the burden of proving the existence of the custom lies and it is not for the zemindar to prove a custom of forfeiture or escheat if the house is transferred. A Mahajan is as much necessary to village economy as a lohar or a barber. Occupants of houses in agricultral villages do not, in the absence of a custom or contract to the contrary, by the mere fact of village being included in a Municipality, acquire a right to transfer the site of their houses or to transfer the right of residence along with the materials of their houses and the presumption that the owners of houses in towns have transferable interest in the site of their houses has no application to agriculturists residing in an agricultural village, though that village may be within the limits of a Municipality. 40 All. 584, and A.I.R. 1927 All. 609, Rel. on; 40 I. —Abwab.

———What amounts to—Each case depends upon the contract in question.

In order to determine whether a particular item is abwab, the rule that has been followed is that each case must depend upon the proper construction of the contract before the Court and if upon a fair interpretation of the contract it can be seen that a particular sum is specified in the contract or agreed to be paid as the lawful consideration for the use and occupation of the land, i. e., if it is really part of the rent although not described as such, the landlord can recover it. The facts that a certain sum is dealt within the kabuliyat in a separate clause or that it is not included in the instalments of rent have an important bearing upon the question of intention of the parties to the contract. They show whether the parties intended to treat a particular item as part of the rent agreed upon to be paid or as something different from the rent. 45 Cal. 259, Foll.

an abwab is covered by the definition of the term "rent." To put it in other words, it must be found that that item is part of the consideration agreed to be paid or delivered by the tenant for the use and occupation of the land provided that such consideration is lawful. The consideration may be wholly monetary or wholly one in kind, or it may be partly in money and partly in kind. The statute does not restrict consideration in kind to grain or other produce of the soil. ——It is a well-settled rule in this country that amongst co-owners, and tenants-in-common, the possession of one will be presumed to be for the benefit of all and that in order to make out such possession as adverse, there must be an open assertion of hostile title on the part of the person setting up adverse possession and overt acts of dispossession amounting to an ouster of the other co-owner. It does not affect the matter at all whether the parties are members of the same family or are co-heirs or not. The principle rests merely upon their being co-tenants or co-owners and should therefore apply to all co-tenants and co-owners irrespective of their being related as members of the same family or not. A person who takes a transfer from a co-tenant or co-owner steps into the shoes of his transferor. When he takes the assignment he is clothed with all the rights and becomes subject to all the liabilities of his transferor. In short he becomes as much a co-tenant or a co-owner as his transferor was before the transfer. This being the position there is no reason for the rule applicable to co-owners and co-tenants not being applied to the transferee. Corea v. Appuhamy, (1912) A.C. 230; Muthunayagam v. Brito, (1918) A.C. 895; Thomas v. Thomas, (1856) 2 K. & J. 79; 18 Cal. 10; 19 Cal. 255 and A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 284, Ref.; A.I.R. 1919 P.C. 44; A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 682; 35 Cal. 961; 23 Bom. 137 (F.B.); 11 M.L.W. 31 and A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 205, Dist. (Shrivastava and Nanavutty, JJ.). Authorities in India show that a tenant in India is not precluded by an admission of tenancy from showing that the nature of tenancy asserted by him to the knowledge of the landlord has been for the period prescribed by the Limitation Act pro tanto adverse to the right to eject at will or on notice given. The question there is not what was the right which actually existed at the beginning of the tenancy but what was the right which he has openly enjoyed to the knowledge of the owner or his representative for the time being. A manifest assertion by the tenant to the knowledge of the person representing the landlord's interest of a right inconsistent with that claimed by the landlord to treat him as a tenant at-will or from year to year would be a disclaimer of the landlord's title. Vivian v. Mote, 16 Ch. In such cases the landlord would not be generally bound unless he accepted the rent knowing the source from which it came. It does not follow that because the rent collector received rent from the transferee of tenant therefore, the landlord recognised him as a tenant. ———Heritable tenure—Sale in execution—Talukdari—Right to recover.

In 1871 a decree in respect of certain plots was passed by the Settlement Court in favour of one P as against the talukdar of the village in which the plots lay. The tenure which P acquired in the plots in suit by virtue of the decree of the Settlement Court was heritable tenure. Through the course of succession the plots came to be vested in a widow who executed a deed of gift in respect of those plots in favour of C and G, the reversionary heirs. In 1901 the talukdar commenced an action for obtaining a declaration as to the invalidity of the deed of gift. A decree was passed in favour of the talukdar. C and G, the donees, were left to continue in possession of the plots and had consistently been recorded in the village papers as tenants with occupancy rights from year to year. A held a simple money decree against C and his co-sharers and in execution of that decree he attached the plots in question. The plots were sold by public auction. A purchased. C and his co-sharers surrendered their rights in the plots in question in favour of the plaintiff talukdar by means of writing and the talukdar sued for the recovery of possession of the plots in suit from the hands of A, the auction-purchaser.

Held, that the talukdar was entitled to the possession of the plots in suit from the hands of the auction-purchaser. The donees C and G were the rightful heirs to the estate of inheritance which would have opened on the death of the widow, had she died on the date when she put them in possession of the plots. The estate of inheritance was accelerated in their favour in the circumstances of the case and, though the gift was invalid, the nature of their possession in law must be treated as an acceleration of their rights as heirs at-law. 10 Cal. 482 (P.C.) and A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 77, Foll. (Wazir Hasan and Rasa, JJ.). ———Transferable tenure in the hands of a tenant is also transferable in the hands of his transferee.

The tenancy of the original tenant was treated by the Government as transferable and the rights of the transferee were recognised by the settlement authorities; the person who first took malikana settlement in 1901 for 5 years, on re-settlement with him, took the property subject to the interest of transferee of the original tenant as the holder of a transferable tenure. The person who took malikana settlement received rent successively from the original tenant and from his transferee and passed receipts in their respective names,

Held, the tenure of the original tenants which was treated as transferable when transferee was recorded as a tenure-holder by the Revenue Authorities before the renewal of the malikhana settlement with the plaintiff, must be treated as a transferable tenure also in the hands of the transferee. The balance of modern authorities is in favour of the view that such engagement between the Government and the settlement holder may be invoked by the tenant for his own benefit and protection, even though he may not be himself a party thereto. ———Nankar—Right to nature.

A right to nankar is, as a rule, to be considered an under-proprietary right of a heritable and transferable nature though a person in receipt of such allowance cannot necessarily be considered to be the under-proprietor of lands of which he may be in possession. This will depend upon the circumstances of each case.

Where a nankar has not been decreed by a Settlement Court or where a person is not shown to have been in enjoyment thereof since the time when he lost his zemindari right and where it is shown that he has been granted those rights at a subsequent time it should be open to the zemindar to show that at the time when such grant was made it did not carry with it an estate of inheritance or transferability but was merely a grant of a personal character, limited to the life or lives of the person or persons to whom it has been granted. If, however, this is not proved by the landlord and the mere fact that a nankar has been granted to the persons who were old proprietors is established then the presumption would be, unless shown to the contrary, that the grant was in lieu of old proprietary right of a heritable and transferable character. This would especially be the case where the person to whom the grant was made happened to be a former proprietor of the village and where the entry of the rights was to be found in the under-proprietary register. 1 O.C. 157; 1 O.C. 163; 4 O. & A. ———Kaval fee—Legality.

Regulation I of 1816 regulated or put upon a statutory basis the collections that used to be made for the purpose of maintaining the Police force. When after the death of the Tanjore Raja in 1856 the East India Company annexed the villages that had been in his possesion, the Kaval fee became a legitimate demand. Regulation I of 1816 became applicable to these villages. When in 1862 the villages were restored to the heirs of the late Raja by the Government, the latter simply handed over the villages with the burden for the maintenance of the police which the Government was then maintaining. Therefore the "kaval" is not an illegal cess or exaction by the landlord and it has had a legitimate origin, and can be collected from the tenants. (Devadoss, J.). Held, the case was not governed by the general custom but by the conditions of the contract entered into between the parties. It was perfectly open to the Zamindar to put restriction, Held, further though the word "malik" ordinarily connotes full ownership it was not intended in the case to give tenant a full right of ownership. Where a lessee is obliged by a covenant in the lease not to assign his interest without the consent of the lessor but the lessor is not entitled to withhold his consent "unreasonably in the case of a respectable and responsible person", the refusal of consent by the lessor is unreasonable if it is found that the proposed assignees are respectable persons who can be trusted to fulfil their obligations under the lease. Even if it is shown that the proposed assignees are already tenants under the same landlord in respect of another letting and that they have defaulted in paying their rent, their respectability and fitness to be assignees of other lease cannot be affected provided that their not having paid the rent under their own lease has been due to a genuine dispute between the parties. "If the yield be carried away..... without acting in accordance with the condition specified in para. 1, in that contingency 'you shall pay at the rate specified in para. herein our malvaram paddy in respect of the total yield of paddy calculated at an average of 170 Kalams and 4 Marakals per rate of nanja, the Kadappu and Kar produce being payable within 15th December and Samba Pisanam produce by the 15th March',

Held, the whole question turned upon the meaning of the term "total yield of the produce." The payment of 170 Kalams was not for the total yield of one portion, nor was it penal as contended by the appellant, but a substituted rent. Cl. 8 imposed no penalty as such but simply set forth a figure which upon the whole might be reckoned a reasonable practical substitute for the actual percentage which owing to the tenants' conduct had been rendered unascertainable. ———Yearly tenant—Contract—Ad idem—Assent—Continuance of possession.

A tenancy from year to year can be created either by contract or by operation of law.

In order to create a tenancy from year to year the acceptance of rent by the landlord must be on payment of such rent by the tenant who admits his position to be that of a tenant from year to year. In other words, the parties must be ad idem. Both parties must be of one mind as regards the nature of the tenancy. If, however, the landlord claims to treat the tenants as tenants from year to year but the tenants assert a permanent tenancy and do not admit their position as tenants from year to year and pay rent, the yearly tenancy cannot be established. The payment of rent by the tenants would be in assertion of their rights as permanent tenants. As permanent tenants they are admittedly liable to pay rent, and if they pay rent with an assertion of permanent tenancy the landlord cannot by mere acceptance of such rent treat the tenants as tenants from year to year.

In order to create a yearly tenancy by assent of the landlord, it is necessary that the assent must be a continuance of possession as tenant from year to year. Where, however, the tenant claims to be in possession not as a tenant from year to ——Conduct—Inference from—Fresh term.

The tenants, on the expiry of the term of their lease, made an application to the landlord asking for a renewal of the settlement. The landlord ordered that settlement for one year should be made with the tenants upon an increased rental. This order carried with it also the condition that a registered kabuliyat should be taken from the tenants. No kabuliyat was executed. The tenants subsequently delivered over to the landlord about 74 maunds of rice. The tenants stated that this was a part of the rental fixed for a renewed lease. The landlord never intended to treat this money as rent but credited the sum not as rent but as mesne profits in his accounts. The piece of paper, upon which the payment was entered, was in the form of a rent receipt but it was kept in the office of the landlord and was never delivered to the tenants,

Held, that the money, which was received by the landlord, was an advance of the rent which would become payable upon the completion of the contract and in no sense can it be urged that by receiving it and keeping the receipt in his possession the proprietor consented to treat the defendants as tenants holding for a fresh term. Courts have to bear in mind not only the nature of the document in which the expressions occur, but also the nature of the proceedings in regard to which the document was drafted. In considering whether what has taken place amounts in law to a denial of the landlord's title the Court must have regard not only to the language used and the circumstances under which it came to be used, but must also consider what the tenant intended by using the particular words under the particular ——Tenant—Immemorial user—Right to acquire.

Although a tenant cannot acquire a prescriptive right of easement in land belonging to his lessor, he may claim a right of easement based on immemorial user, as there is no reason why an owner of land should not grant any privilege he pleases to his tenant. The relationship of landlord and tenant does not render inapplicable the principle, namely, when enjoyment of a right of this description has continued uninterrupted for a long series of years, such enjoyment should be attributed to a legal origin and the Court should presume a grant or agreement. Where the origin of the tenancy is known, but the origin of the right of easement has not been traced the tenancy does not rebut the presumption of a grant which arises upon proof of immemorial use. It cannot be laid down broadly that if a lease provides for a period of grace, the Court has no power to relieve against forfeiture for default in payment of rent.

Although the Court is not precluded in second appeal from granting relief against forfeiture because the offer to pay the arrears was not made in the lower Courts, still considering all the facts together, viz., the failure of the plea of payment, the failure to offer to pay the arrears during the hearing in the lower Courts and particularly the fact

The burden is on the landlord to prove the custom of inalienability and forfeitability as prima facie all property should be taken to be alienable. Prima facie alienation of any portion of a holding would offend against the rule of inalienability if there is one; and unless it can be shown that, under the very custom which imposes the rule of inalienability, the rule does not apply to partial alienations it must be held that a partial alienation will be sufficient to work a forfeiture. Actual knowledge, as distinguished from means of knowledge, is necessary to infer waiver or implied contract as the Courts have to deal in such cases with intention of the person whose act is said to constitute the waiver or the implied contract. Lessor need not be given actual notice of the forfeiture. Knowledge may be inferred from circumstances, and it is not necessary to have direct evidence of it always. (Ayling and Krishnan, JJ.). LANDLORD AND TENANT—Grove—Custom.

—Grove—Consent to plant.

———Confers right.

A grove is constituted by a person without any title to the land only on obtaining the permission of the zamindar to plant trees on the zamindar's land. A grove, therefore, which is owned not by the zamindar but by a person other than the zamindar, can come into existence only when it is planted with the zamindar's consent. (Mukerji and Bennet, JJ.). AJODHIA v. BISHAMBHAR NATH.
A.I.R. 1930 All. 784.

———Effect—Conversion of tenant into grove-holder.

When permission is given by the zamindar to plant a grove on the non-occupancy tenure the effect of this is to put an end to the tenancy as such and to substitute therefor a fresh contract between the parties by which the position of the tenant is converted into that of a grove-holder with transferable rights; the case is much stronger where the land is held with occupancy rights. It is most unlikely that the tenant would agree to spend the considerable sum of money necessary to convert the plot into a grove if he was still to remain liable to be turned out of the land and to loss of the trees at any time. There is no general custom which enables the landlord to step in, in the case of the transfer of a grove, although he may assert his right when the trees have been cut and the land ceases to be a grove. Under these circumstances the land certainly reverts to the landlord but he acquires no right of entry from sale by a grove-holder unless there is a special custom to that effect. ———Transferability.

There is no general custom in force in Oudh (as distinguished from a village custom proved by a wajib-ul-arz or other evidence) to the effect that a grove-holder has no transferable interest in his trees.

LANDLORD AND TENANT—Grove—Custom.

In the province of Agra, subject to any custom or contract to the contrary, the interest of a grove-holder shall be transferable by voluntary transfer or in execution of a decree by a Civil or Revenue Court or otherwise and the same rule applies to the province of Oudh. Where the wajib-ul-arz of the village clearly provides for the right of inheritance in a tenant's grove, it follows that on the death of the original grove-holder the grove and the trees thereon devolve by right of inheritance on the next heir under the law. ——Ordinary presumption—To remain in possession and enjoyment of land and trees—Rebuttal—Onus.

In the province of Oudh a grove-holder is entitled, unless a custom or contract is shown to the contrary, not only to remain in possession and enjoyment of the trees of his grove, but also to remain in enjoyment of the grove land as long as the grove remains in his possession as grove-holder. When a landlord gives a plot of land to a tenant for planting a grove thereon, the ordinary presumption attaching to such a contract is that the tenant to whom such land has been given is entitled to remain in possession of the land also. In many cases it is absolutely necessary that for the purpose of enjoying the produce of trees, the grove-holder should remain in possession of the land also. It may be that a landlord while granting land for the purposes of planting a grove thereon might enter into a stipulation to the effect that the tenant would remain in possession of trees only and not in possession of the land and that he himself would be entitled to take the produce of the land. But such a contract is so unusual that if a landlord wishes to rely upon it, he must definitely allege and establish it to the satisfaction of the Court. If he fails to do so the ordinary presumption would be that when the land was given for the purpose of planting a grove thereon, the tenant was to enjoy the produce of the land in the shape of grass and self-grown trees as along as he was in possession of the grove standing on that land. (Misra, J.). SURAJ BAKHSH v. RAM ANAND. 97 I. C. 882=3 O.W.N. 680=A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 549.

—Grove—Possession.

——As long as character is retained.

A grove-holder is entitled to hold possession of the plot covered by the grove so long as it retains the character of a grove. The mere fact that a portion of the grove has become devoid of trees does not entitle the land-holder to resume that portion of the grove inasmuch as the plot must, in the absence of proof of an agreement or a custom to the contrary, be taken to have been granted as a whole and tenure must, therefore, stand or fall in its entirety. 2 O.L.J. 589 and A.I.R 1926 Oudh 458, Foll. (Rasa, J.). The zamindar sought to eject the plaintiffs from a grove situated on two specified plots of land within the area of his mahal. Plaintiffs pleaded full proprietary title in the grove and were consequently required to establish their title in the Civil Court. The wajib-ul-arz of the village recognised the existence of two different kinds of groves (1) groves in which the holders were the owners of the trees alone but had no rights over the land and (2) groves that were in possession of the persons other than the proprietors of the mahal, and in respect of which the possession of the owner (malik) was in his own right, and the zamindar had no right to interfere. The plots over which the grove in dispute was standing were included in the latter class.

Heritability is a right which has been attached by legislation to the tenure of an occupancy raiyat in Bengal, Behar and Orissa, but it is not a necessary condition attaching to the enjoyment of an occupancy right for life. The question of whether an under-raiyat who acquires occupancy right acquires also right of heritability, depends entirely on local custom. (James and Chatterji, JJ.). ———Evidence of.

Although prior to the Transfer of Property Act a tenancy which was not permanent would not be heritable, successions are in themselves poor evidence that the tenancy is being treated as a tenancy heritable as matter of right. The words "mukarrari istemrari" do not in their lexicographical sense primarily imply any heritable character in the grant as the term "mourasi" does; but they simply imply permanency from which in a secondary sense such heritable character might be inferred, it always being doubtful whether they meant permanent during the lifetime of the persons to whom they were granted or permanent as regards hereditary character, and the words do not per se convey an estate of inheritance. 30 Cal. 883, Ref. (Sir Lancelot Sanderson.) KAMAKYA NARAIN SINGH v. RAM RAKSHA SINGH.

Under ordinary circumstances the right of an under-raiyat is not heritable. ——Effect—Intention of parties—English law—Applicability.

The act of holding after the expiration of the term does not necessarily create a tenancy of any kind, it being in each case a question of fact, what the intention of parties was. At the common law, if the tenant continues in possession by consent of his landlord, he is deemed prima facie a mere tenant-at will. In England in the absence of rebutting evidence the inference arising from payment and acceptance of rent is that the tenancy is tenancy from year to year and prima facie the renewed tenancy is subject to all the terms of the expired tenancy which can be applied to a tenancy from year to year. But these doctrines of English law are not applicable to the whole extent under the Bengal Tenancy Act. (Rankin, C.J. and C. C. Ghose, J.). —Homestead.

——Law governing—Transferability.

Tenancies of homestead land created for the purpose of habitation and purely of the nature of village service tenure are not governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act or by the Transfer of Property Act and are not transferable except by custom or usage and where there has been an implied surrender of the land and the former tenants have abandoned the land the landlord is entitled to take direct possession of it. 7 C. ——Transferability.

Under the law as it stood before the Transfer of Property Act, tenancies whether of homestead land or of agricultural lands were not transferable in the absence of a custom to the contrary or of an express contract to that effect. 12 W. ——No right to sell—Plea—Who can raise.

A plea that a tenant of a house in an agricultural village in the United Provinces has no right to sell more than the materials of his house and that an auction-purchaser of his rights can acquire no right of tenancy, but only a right to the materials, is open only to that landlord of the village and therefore a trespasser cannot by raising such a plea go behind the sale certificate by virtue of which the auction-purchaser enjoys possession of the house and the site. —Improvements.

——Partial—Nevertheless improvements.

If a tenant wastes money by doing useless things the landlord would not be bound to pay the amount spent on such fruitless labour, but where the tenant removes stones or levels the ground so as to make it ready for cultivation, it cannot be said that all his labour is wasted and the land is not improved, simply because some more money is necessary to bring the land into actual cultivation. Where in a suit by Vatandar Khot the question was whether the plaintiff or the defendants were the owners of certain Injali trees standing upon lands which were in the occupation of the vendors of defendants who were not dharekaris, but held their lands since the introduction of the Survey Settlement as tenants of the Khot, subject to certain rights in the nature of the right of occupancy,

Held, that by virtue of Dunlop's Proclamation of 1824, the Khots became the owners of the Injali trees standing in Khoti nisbat, and there has been nothing to extinguish those rights or to transfer those rights to the present defendants.

Held, further, that the mere failure on the part of the plaintiff to sign the annual Kabuliyat should have this result only, that he would not be entitled for the time being to the right of management of the village. That would not, however, affect any other right which he might have independently of that right of management, such as the right to timber-growing in Khoti nisbat lands. 8 B.H.C.R. 1, Foll. (Macleod, C.J. and Crump, J.). ——Acquisition—Compensation—Apportionment.

Certain Bhati lands were acquired under Land Acquisition Act for G.I.P. Ry. in villages Vikhroli and Kanjur. The Khot claimed the whole of the compensation. These grass lands have passed from hand to hand under sale-deeds and the Khot was perfectly aware that the villagers were enclosing these grass lands and were treating them as if they belonged to them.

Held, it is impossible to say that the villagers could not acquire by such action proprietary rights in the lands so enclosed and dealt with. They were entitled to compensation along with the Khot according to the custom of the villages as appears from previous cases. The acquisition of right by prescription is open in law to these villagers against the Khot whatever his rights under the lease may be. 1879 P.J. 274 and 1897 P.J. 9, Ref. (Macleod, C.J. and Shah, J.). —Lambardar.

——Lease of land owned by co-sharers cannot be made by the lambardar alone.

Where some persons were co-sharers in a village of which one was lambardar and the land in question had been held in severalty by persons other than lambardar as their khudkasht for some years with his consent and the lambardar agreed with the persons that they were to have the sole management of the village and were to cultivate all the khudkasht land in it but later the lambardar made a perpetual lease of the land,

Held, that the deed of lease was void and the lambardar had no right to grant it.

There is a common delusion that a lambardar has some sort of personal authority in himself to grant leases of land in which he owns a share. Such a grant can of course be made only by the whole body of proprietors though they must frequently make it through the lambardar as their ——Duties of:

There is no statutory provision of the law which requires a lambardar to maintain accounts of collections and expenses, but he is in a fiduciary position in relation to the co-sharers in the matter of collections and disbursements. He holds the position of a constructive trustee and he is bound to use such due diligence and care in the management of the estate as a man of ordinary prudence and vigilance would use in the management of his own affairs and no lambardar is likely to perform his duties efficiently unless he keeps up accounts which are comprehensible to himself and to the co-sharers; and if he does not keep up such accounts, he is liable to suffer in law by his omission. 4 O.W.N. 694, Ref.

There are circumstances when, if the lambardar fails to fulfil this obligation, he can be made liable for the gross rental, but it will always remain a question of fact, whether his omission in failing to keep proper accounts affords proof of such misconduct or negligence as would justify a passing of a decree on the basis of demands rather than on recorded collections. Held, that the raiyatnama amounted to a personal obligation to refrain from ejecting the executant during the term for which rent was accepted. It did not create a tenancy and was not affected by the law of registration or Ss. 105 and 107, T.P. Act. ——Covenant for renewal—Mere contract, not a demise.

The covenant for renewal does not operate as a present demise but is a mere contract, which can only be given effect to in case of refusal to perform it by the lessor, or by enforcing specific performance of the contract by the lessee. These covenants do not form part of the demise, and as the contract of the lease and the covenant for renewal are two separate contracts, the ratification of the lease does not necessarily amount to a ratification of the covenant for renewal. Raffety v. Schofield, (1897) 1 Ch. 937; Sherwood v. Tucker, (1924) 2 Ch. 440; Hand v. Hall, 2 Ex. Held, the parties to the lease intended the condition under discussion to apply to occasions on which a number of Ruling Chiefs should congregate at Delhi at one time and create competition for house accommodation, as distinguished from isolated visits of single Chiefs, and the clause applied to the Ruling Chiefs' Conference of 1916. ——Permanency—Test.

Unless the words clearly indicate permanency of lease, the surrounding circumstances and the entire terms of the lease must be looked into in order to ascertain the nature of the grant.

The property originally belonged to a zamindar from whom the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants first took a lease of the property in 1876 for a term of three years. On the expiry of the term of that lease, other leases were taken for different terms from time to time by the same lessees from the landlord. The lease just before the one in question was taken in 1895. This was for a term of five years, which was to terminate at the end of the Bengali year 1307, corresponding to the middle of April 1901. Before the expiry of the term of that lease, the present defendants took the lease in dispute by executing a kabuliyat, dated 21st September, 1900. The most important provisions in it being: "I had been till now in possession of the haut, etc., by taking a temporary miadi, ijara settlement of the same and realising rents. I prayed to you for having granted a bemiadi settlement of the haut, etc.....and you, on receiving a salami of Rs. 3,500 from me and fixing the annual rent at Rs. 800, granted my prayer and made me a bemiadi settlement of the haut.....I appear before you and agreeing to pay a rent of Rs. 800 per annum, I execute this deed of bemiadi kabuliyat." The plaintiffs in the suit acquired the interest which originally belonged to the landlord by virtue of a purchase at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree on 28th April, 1921.

Held, that it can hardly be reasonable to suppose that the tenant paid Rs. 3,500 as salami and consented to increase the rent to Rs. 800 in order to take a lease which might be terminated the next month or the next year at the will of the landlord. Taking all these facts into consideration the only reasonable conclusion was that the lease was a permanent one, instead of giving the lessee a more precarious right than what he had under the temporary lease which preceded it. ———Covenant for title—Onus is on lessees to show that lease offered to them is not secure lease.

A contract for grant of mining lease in certain mouzas provided that if the lessees did not take the lease within a certain period "except for want of the lessor's title in the said mouzas" the deposit would be forfeited to the lessor. The settlement record showed the lessor as zamindar of the mouzas and also that one of them was settled as a brahmottar and the other as a debuttar with tenure-holders. Further demand was made by the lessees for production of the deeds of brahmottar and debuttar grants for the purpose of satisfying themselves that underground rights had been reserved to the zamindar and also for execution of an indemnity bond. The lessor replied that no deeds could be traced and that he was not prepared to execute an indemnity bond. The lessees thereupon refused to complete the lease and sued for their deposit.

Held, that the exception clause in the contract referred to title to the underground and not title to the mouzas but it did not increase the obligation as to the title lying on the lessor under general law which included not duty to produce satisfactory evidence of title to the underground before the completion of the lease.

That the onus was on the lessees to show that the lease offered to them was not a secure lease. Moreover the title of the zamindar had not been

—Mortgage.

——Sir land—Foreclosure by second mortgagee—Surrender by mortgagor—Effect.

A subsequent mortgagee who has foreclosed, steps into the shoes of the mortgagor and stands in the same relation to the prior mortgagee as the original mortgagor.

Where sir land was mortgaged first to one mortgagee and then to another and where second mortgagee foreclosed the land, he is in the position of a mortgagor to the first mortgagee and is also in the position of a landlord to the original mortgagee inasmuch as the orginal mortgagor still retains under the law the right of an occupancy tenant in the land and so where the original mortgagor surrendered his occupancy rights in the land to the second mortgagee, it is an ordinary surrender by a tenant during the continuance of the mortgage of the first mortgagee and therefore an accretion to the mortgage; so if the first mortgagee obtains a final decree for foreclosure and sues for possession of the field, he is entitled to a decree. 14 N. ——By tenant—Privity—Liability for rent.

The relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist between a landlord and a mortgagee from tenant. It is either privity of contract or privity of estate which brings such relationship into existence. Even if there be a stipulation in the mortgage-deed for payment of rent by the mortgagee direct to the landlord, it would bind only the parties to the transaction of the mortgage. Being not a party to the transaction, the landlord cannot avail himself of such a stipulation in the mortgage and insist upon payment of rent by the mortgagee. As regards the privity of estate, it arises only when the whole of the tenant's interest in the holding is assigned and not where a subsidiary interest like that of a mortgagee is carved out of the tenant's interest. A sale of the holding would constitute such an assignment of the tenant's interest and would render the purchaser liable for payment of rent despite the absence of privity of contract. Voluntary payment of rent by the mortgagee to the landlord would not per se fasten such a liability on him. 13 C.P.L.R. 19; 40 Mad. 1111 and 30 Mad. 410, Foll. (Kolhatkar, A.J.C.). ——By muafidar.

——Does not amount to abandonment—Right of re entry.

The principle determining the title of the landlord to a re-entry in a case of a sale by a tenant of his grove or of his house is essentially different from the principle applicable to a case where the tenant has made only a temporary alienation of the nature of a possessory mortgage. In the former case the sale is a complete evidence of the abandonment of the tenant's right in the property sold and the alienation being invalid the vendee is a pure trespasser as against the landlord, who on abandonment acquires in law a right of re-entry. On the other hand, where there is a transfer by way of a possessory mortgage only, it does not afford any evidence as to the extinction of the tenant's rights. On the contrary it proves the continuance of such rights. In such a case the landlord has no right of re-entry though the mortgage is invalid according to the custom of the village or being contrary to the conditions of the tenure. (Wazir Hasan, J.). RAMRAJ SINGH v. TEJ SINGH. 99 I.C. 203= 3 O.W.N. 964=8 L.R.A. Rev. 26= A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 46.

——By tenant—Foreclosure—Rights of parties.

Ordinarily, the tenant-right, as between the tenant mortgagor and his transferee, becomes transferred absolutely to the latter the moment the final decree for foreclosure is passed, and nothing remains which the tenant can claim to be his own. If the mortgage on the basis of which such foreclosure is obtained, is a legal, a consented or ratified mortgage, then the transferee's position in order to make the foreclosure binding on the landlord is secure, not only against the tenant, but also against the landlord, because in that case the tenant-right on which the mortgage encumbrance is engrafted becomes validly transferred to the mortgagee as against both the tenant and the landlord. But if the mortgage is neither legal nor consented to by the landlord, nor subsequently ratified by the acceptance of rent by the landlord from the transferee as such, the latter's position is nothing better than that of a mere trespasser liable to be ejected by the landlord on the ground that the tenant's interest having come to an end by reason of the land being foreclosed or put to auction in execution of a decree based on a mortgage, voidable at the instance of the landlord, a right to immediate re-entry into possession has accrued to the

When the beginnings of a tenancy are not known and the documents purporting to create the tenancy are capable of dual or multiple interpretations, what has to be considered is the attendant circumstances and in such a case the method in which the tenancy has been and is enjoyed can also be considered in order to come to a proper solution of the question relating to the tenure. It is ordinarily necessary that a notice purporting to terminate a tenancy of agricultural land should either ask for possession at the end of agricultural year or at least when the crop of the year has already been harvested or perhaps before it has been put down. If the notice is served which has the effect of terminating the tenancy while the crop is standing, it would involve the loss of crop put down when the tenant is not under notice to quit, and the notice becomes unreasonable and ineffective. ——Zerpeshgi lease—Rights of acquisition.

Where the landlord grants zerpeshgi lease, unless there is a restriction in the serpeskgi lease itself restricting the power of the zerpeshgidar as regards the settlement of raiyati lands, the zerpeshgidar in the ordinary course of management would be entitled to settle raiyati or bakshi lands with tenants.

And therefore where zerpeshgidar has settled such raiyati land with a tenant has been in possession for more than 12 years and has therefore acquired an occupancy right, cannot be ejected by the landlord. If the zerpeshgidar has thereby committed any waste or created an encumbrance the remedy of the landlord would be against him. (Adami and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.). LANDLORD AND TENANT—Occupancy rights.

——Threshing floor.

The fact that plaintiffs were tenants in the village and they had been in occupancy of the plot in suit for more than twenty years and used it as their threshing-floor raises the presumption that they held the land as a part of the contract of tenancy and the burden in the circumstances would be on the landlord to show that the land which is claimed as the threshing-floor was really not held as a part of the contract of tenancy but otherwise. 16 All. 181, Foll. (Sulaiman and Mukerjee, JJ.). ——Onus—Ryotwari Village.

In ryotwari villages, the burden of making out occupancy rights lies on the tenant.

A ryotwari village was held by tenants. The lands were being held under muchilikas for terms of years from 1875 to 1896. In all these muchilikas the tenants undertook to surrender the lands at the end of the term. There was constant change of tenants in the village and there were also enhancements of rents. Rents continued to be paid by the tenants for 4 years after the expiration of the period of the last set of muchilikas. Afterwards the Government enhanced the assessment and consequently the landlord neglected the collection of rents. When this happened the tenants also began to make alienations but they were only a few. In 1917 the landlords sued the ex-tenants for use and occupation. The defendants set up the plea that they were occupancy tenants,

Held, that the defendants were not occupancy tenants. 43 Mad. 567; 41 Mad. 1012; 43 Mad. 166 and 47 Mad. 337, Dist. (Ramesam and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.). ANNAMDEVULA THATA v. AHAMADULLA KHAN. 90 I.C. 491=22 M.L.W. 528=A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 890=48 M.L.J. 701.

——Onus—What are not enough.

In order to prove the custom of transferability it is essential for the purchasers of holding from an occupancy tenant to show that they had a right to be recognized by the landlord after purchasing the holdings without the consent of the landlord but in a case where such a transfer was recognised by a landlord after his interest in the land had ceased to exist the recognition is not binding on the purchasers from the landlord of the interest or on the representatives of such a purchaser. ——Land Acquisition—Compensation—Apportionment.

Where land held by an occupancy tenant is not land situated in the midst of agricultural land and changing conditions have given it an increased value as being a prospective building site it would not be right first to assess the value of the landlord's interest in the land as agricultural land and then after deducting that amount to hand over the balance to the tenant. The right method is to approach the subject from the point of view of what the tenant should get as a tenant of agricultural land and after capitalizing the tenant's interest to give the whole of the balance to the landlord. ——Purchase by tenant—Effect.

The purchase by an occupancy tenant of the land under his occupancy has not the effect of extinguishing his occupancy rights. —Permanent tenancy—Nature of.

——Amalgamation with others—Inference.

Four holdings were amalgamated into one holding. From among them, the first, second and third holdings were tenancies-at-will at the time and the fourth was a permanent holding. The position of the consolidated holding, was that an unaltered rent had been paid for 57 years and there existed a pucca holding on a small portion of it at some distant time,

Held, that the mere fact of amalgamation of four holdings into one would not change the respective incidents of the holdings in the absence of a contract to the effect that it was intended to change these incidents and give a higher status to the tenant of the amalgamated holding. The fact of unaltered rent and existence of a pucca structure on a portion are not sufficient to raise the reference of permanency. LANDLORD AND TENANT—Permanent tenancy —Presumption.

——Alteration of—Change of incidents.

Where the tenancy was heritable, was held not for a limited term, was subject to the payment of a fixed rent and was unquestionably transferable the circumstance that one of these elements was altered by agreement of parties namely, that the rent originally fixed was increased, does not destroy the tenancy. —Permanent tenancy—Presumption.

The existance of pucca structure is not essential in all cases in order to establish a permanent tenancy. Where there has been long possession at a uniform rent in a locality where the value of lands have enormously increased and no attempt at ejectment was made and there were several successions to the tenancy even before the passing of the Transfer of Property Act it is a legitimate inference that the tenancy was permanent. ——Clear and unequivocal facts.

For the purpose of ascertaining the character of the tenancy an inference based merely upon facts which are in themselves ambiguous or equivocal, in the sense that they are not necessarily referable to the existence of a permanent right in the tenant is an inference which is unwarranted in law. ———Absence of permanent structure.

Where land is held for residential purposes, the absence of permanent structures is not to be regarded as evidence negativing the permanency of the tenancy, nor can it be laid down that the existence of permanent structures is the only unequivocal or unambiguous fact for the purpose of an inference in favour of the tenant. ———Building leases.

Where the land has been leased for building purposes, it cannot be assumed, in the absence of any clear recital in the lease to that effect, that the landlord intended to allow the tenant to remain in permanent occupation at a small rent. The mere fact that valuable buildings were allowed to be constructed on the land cannot be taken as any indication of the intention of the parties to create a permanent tenancy. (Tek Chand and Bhide, JJ.). MUL RAJ v. INDAR SINGH. 109 I.C. 90= 9 Lah. 576=29 P.L.R. 730=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 554.

———Land let for building.

If the origin and the nature of a tenancy is not known, and if it is proved that a land was let for building purposes and a building was actually constructed on the same, and remained in occupation of the lessees for a long number of years, these facts, in the absence of anything pointing to the contrary conclusion, should be enough to lead to the presumption that, the tenancy was a permanent one. (Iqbal Ahmad, J.). SHAHJAHAN BEGAM v. MUNNA. 100 I.C. 479=A. I. R. 1927 All. 342.

———Degree of permanence of building.

A kachcha house is also a building of a permanent character. A pucca building is a building more permanent than a kachcha one, but the mere difference in the degree of permanence cannot alter the nature of the tenancy. The fact that a kachcha house has been in existence for a period of more than 60 years, and has passed by succession to the heirs of the lessee, who originally built the house, may be enough to lead to the presumption that the lease is a permanent one. Where the origin of the tenancy was unknown but the original tenant and his successor have been in occupation of the land for over 60 years on payment of rent which was never varied and the tenancy was treated by the landlord as heritable and the land was let out for residential purposes, the inference was that the tenancy was in its inception permanent. The presence of a permanent structure on the land is not essential to establish that the tenancy in its inception was of a permanent character. When a person claims to hold land as a permanent tenant, it is for him to prove the existence, the nature and the extent of the interest which the owner of the full rights has granted to him. There is no reason at all to distinguish in this matter between Madras and other towns in this country, when there are the facts from which the proper inference to be drawn is that there is a permanent tenancy. No doubt long possession by a tenant and his ancestors, and the landlord having permitted them to erect substantial structures which have been added to by successive tenants and the transfer of the said tenure from time to time by succession and purchase with the permission of the landlord would warrant a presumption that the tenancy was of a permanent character. Further a similar presumption may also arise when it can be definitely found that the lease was for building purposes. —Proprietary right.

———Right of re-entry—Limits.

To entitle a superior proprietor to bring an action for recovery of possession of land he must have a right of entry either legal or equitable. A superior proprietor has no right of re-entry on the under-proprietary tenure. He cannot bring a suit for ejectment even though persons in possession are trespassers. The fact that the under-proprietors have no title is no ground for holding that the proprietor has a right of re-entry. He must succeed on his own title and not on the weakness of the defendants. The proprietor's only right is to receive rent and no more. This right of his is not in any way affected by the change in possession. But because trespassers have come into possession, the original under-proprietary tenure is not affected in any manner in relation to the proprietor. That tenure carries with it both transferability and hereditability, the two essential elements of ownership which vests in original under-proprietors. 35 All. 273 (P.C.), Rel. on; 10 Cal. 1076, Dist. (Wasir Hasan and Srivastava, JJ.). Where the defendants, the tenure-holders are recorded in the Record-of-Rights as holding land within the ambit of the zamindari of the plaintiff and that he was paying revenue for the same, the onus of showing the nature of their title is upon the tenure-holders and upon a failure to show that they had had a tenancy therein the plaintiff is entitled to resume. But if it is recorded that the defendants were owners of a non-resumable tenure, the onus is shifted upon the plaintiff to rebut the presumption created by the Record of Rights. —Reformation.

———Rights in.

The plaintiff and his predecessors-in-title were at all material times entitled to a zamindari which included a certain mouza in which there were four howlas, of which three belonged to the defendants. For many years the northern part of mouza (including the defendant's howlas) had been submerged. Later the lands in dispute, which were admittedly within the mouza, were reformed. Upon their reformation these lands were taken possession of by the defendants. The plaintiff claimed them and filed a suit for recovery of possession. The defendants failed to prove that the reformed lands were within their own howlas.

Held, that upon such a state of facts the plaintiff must succeed. (Lord Tomlin.) GNANENDRA KUMAR ROY v. PRAFULLA NATH THAKUR.

—Relationship—Creation.

——Decree directing payment of rent.

The suit lands were dense jungle until, in 1828, or later some of the defendants' predecessors began to cultivate them. In 1844 the Revenue Authorities, treating them as Illam or unsettled lands which were at the disposal of the Government not having been included in permanently settled estate, assessed them to revenue; after a long struggle the plaintiff's predecessors succeeded in getting the Revenue Authorities in 1852 to reverse this decision and to recognize that these lands formed part of their permanently settled estate. The plaintiff's predecessors instituted suit in 1854 against the defendants' predecessors for possession and mesne profits. The judgment in that suit provided that as long as the defendants were ready and willing to pay rents legally according to the rates prevailing in the village they should not be ousted from their right as jotidars, that the defendants do pay to the plaintiff the mesne profits due to them and the cost to the extent of the claim as well as costs in Court. There was abundant evidence that they were not so willing but entirely disregarded the decree. The present suit for ejectment was filed in 1912.

——Recognition—Test.

It is not always a fact that where rent receipts are granted with the word "marfatdar" it is conclusive that there was no recognition by the landlord of the person who pays the rent as a tenant (17 C.W.N. 1038, Foll.), but the Court should determine in each case whether on a consideration of all the facts a legal inference can be drawn that there has been a recognition establishing the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties.

Where a tenant died in 1902 and rent had been paid with regard to his share by his heirs from that date till 1918, although the rent receipts had been given to the heirs as "marfatdars",

Held, that a legal inference can legitimately be drawn that the landlords who were entitled to take possession of the share of the original tenant did not do so, but allowed his heirs to remain in possession and received rent from them, and such conduct amounted to recognition of the heirs as tenants. Subsequently a certain land was determined to belong to the mouza and this land was not given possession of to the defendants.

Held, that inasmuch as the defendants had already obtained possession of all the lands in respect of which the rent was fixed, there was no question of abatement or suspension of rent due to the defendants not being given possession of the land subsequently determined to belong to the mouza demised to them. A person who has been deprived of possession of part of the demised premises should not be held liable for the whole rent for ever and this principle applies with greater force where the tenant is deprived of any portion of the leasehold property by any act on the part of the landlord himself. Prima facie the rent is liable to enhancement on the application of the landlord or to reduction on the application of the tenant, unless either of them has precluded himself by contract from claiming such enhancement or reduction respectively.

Apparently the word usually employed in creating a fixed rent in perpetuity is the word "mokarrari," though, no doubt, the absence of such word is not conclusive if other words are found in the grant which clearly show that such a rent was intended to be created.

———Rent fixed in perpetuity cannot be enhanced.

No doubt a suit to enhance rent proceeds on the presumption that a zamindar holding under the Permanent Settlement has the right from time to time to raise the rents of all the rent-paying lands within his zemindari according to the paraganah or current rates unless either he is precluded from the exercise of that right by a contract binding on him or the lands in question can be brought within one of the exemptions recognised by Reg. VIII of 1793. Consequently in each case the nature of the tenure and the conditions under which it is held is the primary question to be determined. ———In a suit for rent at enhanced rate on ground that tenant has been in occupation of more land than he has been paying rent for, plaintiff need not prove area of holding at inception of tenancy.

In a suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate on the ground that the tenants are in occupation of more lands than those for which they have hitherto paid rent, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove the area of the holding at the time of the inception of the tenancy.

In order to determine whether the landlord is entitled to additional rent, the question which has to be solved is, whether the tenant is in occupation of land on which rent has not been assessed and for which he is bound to pay rent. The determination of this question may depend upon the consideration of a variety of circumstances. The tenant may be liable to pay additional rent, because since the date of the last assessment, he may have encroached on adjoining waste, or taken possession of accreted land. On the other hand, if he has not encroached upon the adjoining waste of his landlord or if no land has accreted to his holding, and if he is still in occupation of the holding which he held when rent was last assessed, he may be liable to pay additional rent, if it is proved that rent was not assessed at a consolidated sum upon the entire area then in his possession but upon an assumed area or upon an area determined by measurement as the area in his possession. It then stated: "I execute the dowl kabuliyat for a total jama of 13-8-14¾ including hajat . . . for the lands included within the boundaries described below, at 11-5 by keeping Rs. 2-3-14¾ as hajat" and "the aforesaid amount of Rs. 2-3 11¾ which is kept in hajat you shall include it within the talabjama whenever you please and you will realize the rent of Rs. 13-8-4¾."

Held, that the word "hajat" signified that the sum of Rs. 2-3-14¾ was kept in abeyance for some time and it was optional with the landlord to realize the sum of Rs. 2-3-14¾ at any time he liked as a part of the talabjama. On the continuation of the kabuliyat, therefore, the hajat was a part of the rent, and it could be realized as such whenever the landlord desired to do so. LANDLORD AND TENANT—Rent—Payment.

On the death of a raiyat it is no doubt the duty of the landlord to recognize all the heirs of the deceased tenant as representing the whole body of the tenants, but it cannot be said that it is not also the duty of the heirs after the death of a raiyat to appear before the landlord and get themselves recorded as tenants in the place of their deceased ancestor. It is not unusual in this country, that on the death of a Muhammadan raiyat only the sons who are in possession of the jote, seek for recognition from the landlord as the representatives of the deceased raiyat, in the jote when the daughters of the raiyat who have been married to different families, have left perhaps the village and do not care to possess their shares of the jote and make themselves liable for the rent thereof. In such a case the landlord is entitled to record as his tenants those who take possession of the jote and apply to be recorded as representing the deceased raiyat; when that is done, it is done at the instances both of the landlord and the heirs of the raiyat who take possession of the land and appear before the landlord for recognition as representatives of the deceased jotedars. It is true that such a recognition by a landlord only of the heirs in possession does not in any way affect the rights of the absent heirs. But until such an heir asserts her rights the raiyats who have paid rent after their recognition cannot after years of such payment turn round and set up the right of the absent heirs of the deceased raiyat, who had never been in possession and never cared to appear before the landlord for recognition as one of the heirs. ———Presumption applies if tenant has held at uniform rate for 20 years before suit—Actual payment of rent is not necessary.

In order that the presumption under S. 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act might apply. It is not necessary that the tenant should establish actual payment of rent during the 20 years at a uniform rate; he has to establish that he and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the suit or proceeding. This involves a real distinction for a person may hold as a tenant even though he does not actually pay the rent agreed upon to his landlord. There may be cases in which a ryot might not have paid his rent for many years prior to the institution of the suit for enhancement. But if there has been no change in the rent payable by him he is not to be deprived of the presumption which the law has expressly laid down for his benefit. Omission to pay rent on behalf of the tenant or refusal to receive rent on the part of the landlord does not cause cessation of the tenancy. 11 W.R. 432; 19 W.R. 100; 27 C.L.J. 281; 18 C.L.J. 76; 1 W.R. 45; 5 W.R. —Rent—Rate of.

———Landlord is not entitled to value paddy at current rate but at rate fixed in the patta.

After stating that the rent will be payable in cash and in paddy the patta provided that if for an unavoidable reason tenant was unable to pay the paddy its market price at the rate of Rs. 4 per pali should be paid. The amount fixed was Rs. 34-5-0. The total price of the paddy together with road and public works cesses amounting to Rs. 50 were to be paid according to certain kists. Held, that the law was not that the wet rate was the proper rate to fix for such lands, and that the Courts below were perfectly justified in holding that to award a reasonable compensation was the proper method of fixing the rate chargeable.

—Rent—Receipt.

———The grant of receipts by a Collector of rents does not amount to transfer of holding.

The authority to collect rent does not carry with it the authority to grant rent-receipts. The question is not of technicality, but of substance. "An authorised agent" for the purpose of granting rent receipts differs widely from a collecting peon. It is not within the scope of the authority of a rent collector to consent on behalf of his master to the transfer of an occupancy holding. That is an important act to be performed only by a person having some at least of the powers of a manager. Landlords would be in a very difficult position if it were held that Patwaris and other underlings should be presumed till the contrary is shown; to have the power to sign away their master's rights. A person who has conveyed his proprietary interest to another person but whose name is still borne on the Collector's register, by giving a rent-receipt cannot recognize a person as having a right of occupancy in the land who otherwise had no such right.

Per Adami, J.—A recognition by a landlord to be effective in favour of a tenant must be clear and certain. 1 P.L J. 414; 2 P.L.J. 231, Russo Chinese Bank v. Li Yau Sum, (1910) A. —Rent—Remission.

———Where the tenant is evicted or is not secured in his possession of part of leased property the tenant is only entitled to a remission of rent and is not entitled to refuse to pay any rent at all or to throw upon the landlord the burden of proving what rent was payable to him. Ordinarily there would be a proportionate reduction of rent according to area unless one side or the other shows that the lands lost possession of were either of superior or inferior quality when that factor would have to be taken into consideration in ascertaining the proportion. ———Tenants pleading permanent and hereditary istimrari mukarrari and not claiming land rent free —In subsequent suit for rent tenant pleading adverse possession on basis of notice to quit served before previous ejectment suit—Tenant held estopped from raising that defence.

In suits for rent the defendants were the successors of the grantees of istimrari mukarari leases of the properties in suit from the predecessors of the plaintiff. The leases were leases for life only. For a number of years after the death of the original grantees their successors continued to pay the rent and they got receipts from the plaintiff's predecessors in the name of the old lessee. Eventually they declared that they would pay no more rent unless they were recognized as permanent tenure holders. In this way payment of rent ceased in the year 1900 ; and in 1904 the tenants applied for mutation of their names in the landlord's papers. In 1904 notice to quit was served upon them without effect; and this notice was repeated in 1915 and 1917. Subsequently a suit in ejectment was filed in 1919 which failed on account of Art. 139, Lim. Act. There in that suit the defendants never claimed to hold land free of rent, but had always taken the position that they were permanent tenure holders. It was contended by them that the notice to quit served on them put an end to tenancy in 1904 and since there had been no relation of landlord and tenant after that owing to 12 years' lapse of period fixed by notice to quit, the plaintiff's right to property was extinguished under S. 28, Limitation Act,

When a raiyat dies it very often happens that the male members of the family are allowed to represent the tenancy. So far as the landlord is concerned they are recorded as tenants in the landlord's sherista. The recorded tenants pay rent for the whole holding and the landlord recognises them as the sole tenants of the holding so far as he is concerned. Such arrangement does not really extinguish the right of the other heirs. If they are ignored they have right to establish their rights against the usurper and they may ask the landlord to record them also as joint tenants. But until that is done the landlord has a right to institute suits for rent against the recorded tenants and the decree which the landlord obtains in such a suit would have the character of a rent-decree although it is obtained against one or some of the heirs of a deceased tenant, the principle being that the landlord is not bound to go beyond his books to find out who the tenants are. ——Though generally questions of title as between plaintiff and third persons are irrelevant their determination where necessary for determining the relationship between the landlord and tenant is not illegal.

In a rent suit, there is no rule of law that questions of title which require to be determined are not to be determined : but there are two reasons why, in general, questions of title as between the plaintiff and third persons do not require to be determined. The first reason is that for a claim to rent as distinct from damages mere proof of the plaintiff's title is not sufficient. The second reason is that the plaintiff who as against the third person has no title may have a perfectly good claim against the tenant whom he has inducted for rent. Accordingly, between the landlord and the tenant the question of relationship subsisting between them and the question of the plaintiff's or anybody else's title are distinct questions though they may, for accidental reasons, become entangled. But, the treatment of questions of title arising incidentally as independent and substantive issues is wrong. They are matters bearing upon the sole issue, the question of relationship between landlord and tenant. (Rankin and Mukerji, JJ.) CHITPORE GOLABARI CO., LTD. v. GIRIDHARI LAL SAROGI. 78 I. —Rent—Suspension.

——When tenant deprived of occupation of part of the tenure, landlord not entitled to any rent.

The doctrine of suspension of rent depends solely on this that the rent due is in respect of the land demised. If therefore the tenant is not given occupation of the whole of the land demised, landlord has no right to the entire rent and unless he has a right or some equity to an apportionment he can recover nothing on the contract. The whole basis of doctrine is that rent due is an entire sum.

The landlord dispossessed the tenure-holder from a small part of the land demised and gave khas possession to a third person. The land was included in the patta, ——Whether suspension of the entire rent should be ordered or only abatement of rent should be allowed depends on facts of each case.

It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to when suspension of entire rent should be ordered or when only abatement of rent should be allowed where the tenant has been dispossessed from only a portion of the demised properties. Each case has to be decided on its particular facts. Where a tenant in possession had been dispossessed by the landlord from a considerable portion of the demised property and where the settlement was for a lump sum of rent and not so much per bigha.

——English common law rule is to be applied in exceptional cases, as a rule of equity—Court should apportion wherever possible.

The technicalities of the English common law as to the rule of suspension of rent should not be imported in this country, particularly in the mofussil, irrespective of any consideration whether the application of such rule would meet the ends of justice. To hold that in every case of dispossession of the tenant from a part there should be an entire suspension of rent so as to entitle the tenant to hold the remainder rent free in perpetuity, is not consistent with justice.

The Court should always endeavour to apportion the rent whenever possible and be very careful in applying the rule of suspension of rent which is to be applied in India as a rule of equity, justice and good conscience and which can only be allowed in exceptional cases having regard to the circumstances of the case.

The doctrine of suspension of payment of rent, where the tenant has not been put in possession of part of the subject leased has no application to a case where the stipulated rent is so much per acre or bigha. But it cannot be laid down that where the rent is fixed in a lump, there would be suspension of rent on the ground of dispossession of a part of the demised premises by the landlord and there should not be any apportionment in any case. ——For suspension of rent, findings as to eviction by lessor must be clear.

In order to cause suspension of rent on account of eviction by the landlord the finding must be clear that there has been an eviction in fact and that the lessor was a party to the eviction and it must also be found as a fact as to whether the act was done by the landlord with the object of depriving the tenants of the peaceful enjoyment of any portion of the demised premises. These elements are necessary to be found for the purpose of calling into aid the doctrine of suspension of rent on account of eviction by the landlord. The doctrine of suspension of rent has been applied where the rent was fixed in a lump for the whole land leased treated as an indivisible subject and it cannot be applied where the rent is to be fixed according to the area in the possession of the tenant. It does not apply to a case where the tenant is liable to pay rent at so much per bigha per year. A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 97, Foll. (B. B. Ghose and Panton, JJ.). LANDLORD AND TENANT—Rent—Suspension.

——To justify a suspension of the entire rent, it must be shown that the eviction was the act of the landlord and was done with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises or land and not that it was merely accidental resulting from ignorance of the parties as to the real boundaries of the land.

The Common Law doctrine of suspension of rent can only be applied in India as a rule of equity, justice and good conscience and should be applied with caution only where the facts are such that the equities of the case clearly require its application for doing justice between the parties. Mere acceptance of a reduced rent by the landlord for a number of years does not deprive him of his right to claim rent at the stipulated rate. Further, the mere fact that the landlord accepted rent at the original rate from the lessee for a number of years after the expiry of the term of the lease is not sufficient to raise the presumption that the contract for enhanced rent has been waived by the landlord. But where the conduct of the landlord is less equivocal, as for example, when he sues the tenant on the basis of the reduced rent as if that was the rent payable for the land, it may be presumed that the landlord has waived his right to recover a higher rent. 16 C.W.N. 496; 20 C.W.N. 347; 20 C. LANDLORD AND TENANT—Settlement.

—Settlement.

Although a person holding settlement from Government of Government khas mahal or temporarily settled estate is bound under terms of the settlement to recognize the tenants or tenure-holders mentioned in the settlement papers, there is nothing in the law which prevents the settlement holder from enforcing a right he has obtained otherwise than under settlement from Government. 32 Cal. 463 n; 37 Cal. 449; 5 C.L.J. 67; 11 C.L.J. 68; 24 C.W.N. 53 and 3 P.L.J. 394, Ref.

The landlord who was a temporary tenant-holder from the Government, purchased the tenants holding in execution of a rent decree and obtained symbolical possession in 1918, but having failed to get actual possession sued the tenant for khas possession. Previous to filing the suit the landlord has executed an agreement in favour of the Government and thereby agreeing to respect the rights of the recorded right in settlement papers. The tenants were recorded as settled raiyats in the Record-of-Rights finally published. It was also pleaded that the tenant was recognised as such though no rent was paid as a suit was instituted by the co-sharer of the landlord for rent for period subsequent to 1918 to which the landlord was made a party, Held. (Per Suhrawardy, J.).—That the landlord was entitled to eject the tenant as the suit was brought not as settlement holder but as purchaser and therefore, he had right to enforce his right obtained under the decree as opposed to his rights under the settlement.

That the mere fact the landlord was a party to the rent suit did not constitute any recognition.

Per Jack, J.—That in agreement under the settlement with the Government to respect the rights of the tenants as recorded in the Record-of-Rights, the landlord in the circumstances of the case should not be held to have undertaken to forego his existing right under the decree. Any tree that a raiyat, clearing land for cultivation saves, saves for himself and not for the landlord and it is his own property, in the absence of such stipulation in that regard or (sometimes) village custom in respect of important fruit trees. Furthermore, even where the timber of a tree or part of it belongs to the landlord, it does not follow that he or any one deputed by him, is entitled to enter upon the holding of the raiyat and cultivate lac on the trees. Thus where a lessor expressly reserved property in the trees growing on leasehold land, but allowed phal phul to the lessee, the ownership of the trees did not carry with it a right to go on the lessee's lands to cultivate shellac on the reserved trees. 24 C. ——Landlord is entitled to a declaratory decree as cloud is cast upon the landlord's title by the tenant claiming under-proprietary right.

The landlord issued a notice of ejectment to the tenants and they contested the notice on the ground that they were under-proprietors. The Board of Revenue decided that the tenants were not liable to ejectment as they held the plots under a special agreement and a decree of the Court. The landlord brought a suit for a declaration that the tenants are only tenants of certain plots and had no under-proprietary or pukhtadari rights in them,

Held, that it was a case in which a cloud had been cast on landlord's title which had not been finally removed by the decision of the Revenue Courts which were not competent to decide the question of under-proprietary title. The landlord had a right to sue and as his claim was not contested in the sense that the tenants did not assert any pukhtadari or under-proprietary right, the landlord was entitled to a decree. Village Chincholi was leased by Government in 1831, and the defendants khots were the successors-in-title of the lessee; plaintiff claimed to be the successor-in-title of a person who was in possession of the land in suit prior to the above-mentioned lease plaintiff's title was traced to 1867: a considerable portion of the land was utilised for building purposes up to 1915 only the fixed annual payment was charged but in 1915-16 enhanced assessment was levied; plaintiff claimed that lands were suti and subject only to fixed annual payment and that the defendants were entitled to nothing more than the fixed payment.

Held, that the plaintiff was a sutidar of the lands in suit to which Regulation 1 of 1808 applied; that the lands in suit were subject to a perpetual fixed grain rental commuted into money payment and continued to be invariable until there had been a decennial valuation changing the commutation rate by Government that the tenure did not come to an end by reason of the change in the use of the lands, and that the rates fixed by the survey assessment did not amount to the decennial valuation contemplated in S. 41, Regn. 1 of 1808, and that the assessment in excess of the fixed annual payment levied invariably from the year 1867 could not be recovered by defendants. (Patkar and Baker, JJ.). KISANLAL v. JAMNEJAYA. 118 I.C. 244= 30 Bom. L.R. 992=A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 457.

——In the province of Oudh large proprietors let out lands on favourable terms on security of tenure. These grants of land are called Birt Bankati and various kinds of birts exist, the incidents of each of which differ from those of others.

In the present case, the defendant held the village Kundarwa under a birt grant created so long ago as 1802. The Pottah under which the birt-holders obtained the village declared that the land of the village was granted to get it cultivated and populated, for the purpose of cleaning the jungle, making the land fit for cultivation, and bringing raiyat, which carried with it the duty of sinking wells, etc. It declared that "the birt-holder was to enjoy it for five or six years." A comparatively small but gradually ascending rent was fixed for next 4 years. After that he was to pay the revenue to the Sarkar prevalent in the Taluka and take the daswant prevalent in the Taluka. In 1871 the Extra Assistant Commissioner declared the birt-holder as an under-proprietor and made a decree upholding in express terms his "possession and occupation as an under-proprietor under the provisions of Circular 11 of 1862 in respect of the village Kundarwa,"

Held, the respondents birt-holders, as declared, in the village of Kundarwa held under-proprietary rights. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) MAHAMMAD ABDUL HASAN KHAN v. LACHMI NARAIN. 63 I. LAND TENURE—Ghatwali tenure.

—Dholi tenure.

——The dholi tenure is a peculiar kind of tenure to be found in the south-eastern districts of the Punjab. It is a rent-free grant of a small plot of land by the village community for the benefit of a temple, mosque of shrine, or to a person for a religious purpose. In the revenue records the proprietary body are recorded as the owners of the property and the grantee is recorded as a tenant in the column of cultivation. So long as the purpose for which the grant is made, is carried out, it cannot be resumed, but should the holder fail to carry out the duties of his office the proprietors can eject him and put in some one else under a like tenure. Tenure of this kind cannot be alienated by sale or mortgage, and any alienation of that character, if made by the dohlidar, would be absolutely void. There is, therefore, no reason why the defendant should not be able to impeach the alienation, more especially because the office of dohlidar is similar to that of a trustee, and it is open for one trustee to impeach the validity of an alienation made by his predecessor. A person may be a mourashi mokarraridar and also a ghatwal. (918 P.H.C.C. 305 and A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 5, Ref.). The distinction between a ghatwali within the Regulation and ghatwali which is outside the Regulation is that in the former case there is no tenure between the zamindar and the ghatwal who holds direct from the Government, while in the latter the tenure exists. In the former case, while the lands of the ghatwali are still deemed to be within the zamindari, the zamindar no longer pays the Government revenue for them and has, therefore, no claim to the under ground rights; his only right connected with these lands is to receive the difference between the rent paid by the ghatwal and the amount of the Government revenue which was assessed on this part of the zamindari. If the Government does not claim the mineral rights there is no one to whom they can belong but the ghatwal. But in the latter case the zamindar still pays the Government revenue on these lands and if the ghatwal claims the minerals he must show some transaction which grants him the minerals either expressly or by necessary implication. The incidents of a ghatwali tenure widely differ in the different parts of the country in the case of all service tenures, they generally differ and before coming to a conclusion as to whether occupancy rights have accrued in respect of ghatwali lands by reason of a custom or usage to that effect, such custom or usage must be pleaded and evidence led as incidents of a ghatwali tenure are inconsistent with a right of occupancy rights in land subject to such ghatwali tenure. LAND TENURE—Ghatwali tenure.

——Ghatwali tenures are inalienable and indivisible—Actual appointment of next heir is not necessary—Nature and termination of the tenure—Law regarding ghatwali tenures in general considered—Hundwa estates are ghatwali in nature.

A Ghatwali tenure is inalienable and indivisible and cannot be sold in execution of a decree against the person of the incumbent of the office of ghatwal for the time being 9 Cal. 187 (P.C.) and 10 M.I.A. 16, Ref. Neither by the terms of the grant nor by the general law applying to such ghatwali tenures is an actual appointment of the next heir to be ghatwali in the rooms of his predecessor requisite, nor is actual performance of the stipulated ghatwali services from time to time necessary. Readiness and willingness to perform them when required may be inferred where there is no proof of refusal to perform and where performance within a reasonable time, if required, is not shown to have become impossible. Law relating to ghatwali tenures in general considered.

Hundwa tenure is a Government tenure. It is a perpetual and hereditary tenure, being a service tenure and ghatwali in nature.

To terminate the ghatwali character of the lands, it seems that it is necessary to find something done or omitted to be done on the part of the Government, as the grantors, which would have the legal effect of a surrender, and re-grant of the lands on new terms, or, at any rate, of a release of the right to appoint the ghatwal and call for the performance of the services.

Where a tenure is created, as distinct from a personal employment the tenure-holder has such an interest in the rendering of the services as entitles him to such benefit of the tenure as accrues from his readiness and willingness to perform his obligation. The service is not a mere burden on the land. It constitutes a personal right which cannot be terminated on the ground merely of waiver by grantor or desuetude. ——Distinction between Kharagpur and Birbhum tenure.

LAND TENURE—Ghatwali tenure.

The ghatwali tenure in Taluka Dumri is in no way comparable to the Birbhum ghatwali tenures, and Reg. XXIX of 1814 does not apply to it, but in its origin it is rather of the nature of the Kharagpur ghatwalis. One of the main distinctions between these two classes is that the former are inalienable except with the consent of Government by whom the settlements were made and to whom the revenue is paid direct, whereas the latter are alienable subject to the consent of the landlord to whom the rent or revenue is paid. The incidents that are proved to attach to the tenure are:—(1) that it is impartible and permanent, (2) that it descends by lineal primogeniture, and (3) that it is alienable at least with the consent of the Zamindar. ——New settlement.

Where the jaghir was specifically mentioned as a service tenure involving the performance of police and other duties and a new settlement with the Taluqdar showed that the rent was increased from Rs. 735 to Rs. 1,000 four villages were taken out of the Pargana and set apart for the maintenance of the widows of the previous holder, and a new patta was granted to him by the Maharaja and a new Parvana was issued to him at the zamindar's instance for possession of the jaghir.

Held, in the face of these facts it is idle to contend that the settlement with the Taluqdar was a continuance of the old tenure. Had the Taluqdar succeeded to the jaghir by right of inheritance the maintenance of the Ranis the widows, would have exclusively devolved on him and the superior landlord would have had no concern with it or the right to take away any part of the property to provide for their maintenance. The Maharaja's interference on behalf of the widows is explainable only on one hypothesis, viz., that he was making a new arrangement by virtue of a right recognized by the authorities.

Resumption in connection with these service tenures does not mean that on failure of the direct male line it "escheats" to the zamindar and becomes what is called his Sir or Khas property; the jaghir retains its character, but the zamindar becomes entitled to make a new settlement with the knowledge and sanction of the authorities. ———Purchase of sir rights.

Sir rights, though they can only be held by a proprietor, are something beyond and apart from the mere proprietary right. The right of a sir holder is a right to exclusive possession coupled with the fact that no person cultivating under him can acquire occupancy rights.

In a joint undivided village each proprietor may have his own separate sir although the proprietary rights in the whole village are joint.

The acquisition of sir rights by purchase is not allowed. Where the entire sir has been sold and the purchaser obtained actual cultivatory possession, the land is treated as his khudkhast and not as his sir.

The purchaser of the rights of three out of four joint holders of sir rights can be ejected by the fourth owner if he takes possession of that owner's portion. In such a case, a person jointly interested in the sir khata does not lose his sir rights. (Daniels, J.). RAM PRASAD SINGH v. JANKI PRASAD SINGH. 80 I.C. 899= A.I.R. 1925 All. 93.

—Kumki lands.

———In the case of lands in South Canara it is usual for pattadars to occupy lands adjoining their patta lands for the purpose of convenient enjoyment of their holdings under patta or for purpose of cultivation, etc. The Government generally grants such land known as kumki land on darkhast to the pattadars. When the land is kumki granted on darkhast, any right previously granted by the wargdor in favour of a tenant as regards the kumki land comes to an end, and even if there is a mortgage right on the land created by the wargdor it comes to an end as soon as the grant is made by the Government to the wargdor or any other person. 35 M.L.J. 120, Foll. (Devadoss, JJ.). LNAD TENURE—Mirasi tenure.

———Incidents of.

The special incidents of mirasi tenures are somewhat varied in different villages. Sometimes the mirasidars have got some special rights over waste lands. Some portion of the village land is joint for all the mirasidars and is known as samudayam. Sometimes they are subject to a payment of kist to Government only if they cultivate and they have got the option to cultivate or not if they like. Where the land not held by the original mirasidars is leased out by Government to new tenants or non-mirasidars, the original mirasidars and their descendants have a right to get some special fee from the new tenants called swatanthrams. The mirasidars themselves are regarded as occupancy tenants and their under-tenants known as payakaris have in general no occupancy rights. The share paid by the payakaris is called thunduvaram. The mirasi right is held in shares, pangus, sometimes specified lands being allotted to each pangu and sometimes the pangus not being defined with reference to the lands. Where one Mirasidar is the sole tenant of all the lands of the village he is then known as egabhogam Mirasidar. The muchilikas executed by the tenants in favour of the mirasidars where they indicate absolute rights of the mirasidar are described as swanubhogam muchilikas. 40 Mad. 410 (F.B.), Ref. (Ramesam and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.). ———Suit for partition.

Samudayam tenure is a holding in common by the village community known as the mirasidars.

Karaiyeedu tenure consists in a system of shifting severalty of ownership the village lands being re-distributed among the mirasidars at intervals. A suit brought for the partition of the village lands and for change to individual ownership lies whether the tenure of the village is Samudayam tenure or the Karaiyeedu tenure. ———Grant of proprietary rights.

Plaintiffs were mirasidars under-defendants under Miraspatras of 1859 and 1864 which recited that the grantee would bring the land under cultivation. The quit rent was fixed as the assessment which would be imposed at the survey less the sum of Rs. 50. Beyond this no right was reserved to the Inamdars. The deed contained expressly that the Inamdars "have no right or claim whatsoever to the said lands," and allowed the grantee the right to recover any sort of tax or cess—Kulbab Kulkanu—from those who held under him. On the introduction of the Survey Settlement building fine was levied on the mirasidar under rules made under Ss. 65 and 48 of the Land Revenue Code. Plaintiff sued for declaration that he was not liable to pay the fine.

Held, the deed did in fact give the plaintiff rights which might be described as those of a sub-inamdar and they were entitled to a declaration that they were not liable to pay building fine to the inamdar and to an injunction restraining the Inamdar from collecting such fines through the collector. LAND TENURE—Mortgage.

—Mortgage.

——Not adhlaphi tenure.

One half of a certain area of land was sold and the vendee was to sink a well but not at his own expense, it being specifically agreed that the vendor would pay half of the total expenditure incurred on the sinking of the well and the preparation of the ground for cultivation. The vendee was to be in possession of half of the land not sold, and, out of the produce thereof, recover half of the expenditure which was payable by the vendor and the vendee was to keep strict accounts of the expenses and income.

Held, that the transaction was a lekhamukhi mortgage and an adhlaphi tenure was not created. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Broadway, J.). DITTU MAL v. ILAHI BAKHSH. 101 I.C. 549= 9 L.L.J. 63=28 P.L.R. 123=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 828.

——Biswi mortgage.

Where land held by tenant is mortgaged by the proprietor to the tenant in consideration of money paid by the latter, it is not unusual for the tenant to appropriate a portion of the rent, for which he was originally liable, towards interest due on his loan and to pay the balance, known as paramsana, to the mortgagor. Biswi is the name usually given in Eastern Oudh to mortgages of this kind. The extinction of the right of redemption of this kind does not destroy the right of the mortgagor or his successors to claim the paramsana as rent for the paramsana does not fall within the rights to which the mortgagee is entitled. If a nadgi tenure-holder neglects to cultivate the land, allows the hut to go into disrepair, carries away some of the building materials himself, and allows the rest to be stolen by others, he is liable to be evicted from his holding at the instance of the landlord.

——Grant—Presumption.

A right to nankar is, as a rule, to be considered an under-proprietary right of a heritable and transferable nature though a person in receipt of such allowance cannot necessarily be considered to be the under-proprietor of lands of which he may be in possession. This will depend upon the circumstances of each case.

Where a nankar has not been decreed by a Settlement Court or where a person is not shown to have been in enjoyment thereof since the time when he lost his zemindari right and where it is shown that he has been granted those rights at a subsequent time it should be open to the zemindar to show that at the time when such grant was made it did not carry with it an estate of inheritance or transferability but was merely a grant of a personal character, limited to the life or lives of the person or persons to whom it has been granted. If, however this is not proved by the landlord and the mere fact that a nankar has been granted to the persons who were old proprietors is established then the presumption would be, unless shown to the contrary, that the grant was in lieu of old pro-

The rule of succession to a permanent tenure, heritable in its character, is, in the absence of a statute, terms of a grant, if any, or valid and binding custom to the contrary, the same as is applicable to other properties left by a deceased tenant. If a special custom excluding collaterals from inheritance as regards a permanent tenure is pleaded, the party pleading such a custom must have the onus laid on it to prove by satisfactory evidence that such collaterals, though heirs under the personal law of the deceased tenant in respect of all other assets left by him, were excluded from inheritance as regards his rights in the permanent tenure. ——Tenants inducted by Pradhan cannot acquire rights by adverse possession against the landlord. To define the status of a Pradhan in the Santhal Parganas is a somewhat difficult matter. —Rafa-tanki tenure.

——The nature of the Rafa-tankidari interest is a question for determination in each case and they cannot be classed as a whole either as tenures or as raiyati holdings.

The status of Rafa tankidars in the particular case was that of tenure-holders and the tenants under them were occupancy raiyats.

In 1838 during the resumption proceedings by the British Government a compromise was entered into between some of the Tankidars and the Government to the effect that on condition of their agreeing to pay rent at a certain fixed rate no enquiry would be made as to the liability of their interests to be resumed. The rates so fixed were known as Rafa tanki, or compromise quit rents, and the holders of these lands came to be known as Rafa-tankidars. In many cases Rafa-tankidars belonged to the raiyati class, but this in itself is not sufficient to show that their interests were necessarily those of raiyats rather than tenure-holders. The grant of a title deed at the enfranchisement of a service inam (unlike the case of personal inam) confers a new title. The title cannot be questioned by persons unconnected either with the office or with the family of the grantee. The title conferred by enfranchisement is not necessarily confined to grants to persons either holding the office at the time of enfranchisement or those claiming the right to do so, though ordinarily as the land follows the office, the title would be conferred on the office-holder at the time of enfranchisement. It would be open to an outsider claiming an enfranchised service inam to show either that it was not an inam at all liable to resumption or that he had by prescription acquired a title to the property, good, not only as against the service holder, but also against the Government, so that the Government's power of disposition was lost. ——Properties purchased from income.

The mere fact that the absolute owner of a certain talukdari as well as non-talukdari properties mixed together the incomes of both the properties and purchased further properties does not impress the subsequently purchased properties with the character and status of talukdari property and it is only the ordinary rule of succession that would apply to it. —Thanadari lands.

——Rights of holder.

The holders of thanadari land stand in a certain position to the contiguous zamindar. If the lands are resumed, they are to be settled with the zamindar; and it may be that they may even be described as settled with the zamindar in a in the sense, and that there is a sort of superiority certain zamindar which might entitle him to the surface of the land in case of escheat, but whether this would give him a claim to the minerals is a question. The view that thanadari lands, though made resumable, were not always resumed is a difficult one to support. 6 M. I. A. 101 (P. C.); 10 M. I. A. 16 and 44 Cal. 841 (P. ——While both Lakhiraj and Thanadari lands were excluded from the operation of the Permanent Settlement, Lakhiraj lands were neither assessed nor settled with the zamindar while Thanadari lands were settled with the zamindar but excluded from the operation of the Permanent Settlement in the sense that the resumption and re-assessment thereof was reserved by the Government. 10 M. I. A. 16 (P. C.) and 42 Cal. 710 (P.C.), Rel. on.

Resumption in connexion with Thanadari lands properly so called was concluded within a short time after the Permanent Settlement and the zamindars were not allowed to enjoy the produce of such lands or allowances granted in respect of them to the detriment of the public revenue for any considerable length of time afterwards.

A person who claims under a settlement from the Collector on the lands having been resumed is entitled to prove dispute all this that the resumption took place on the footing that the lands were Thanadari or that the proceedings relating to the resumption were such as were sanctioned by the Regulations or were in accordance therewith and he can show by other evidence as well that the lands were Thanadari lands. ——Kharposh mukarrari.

As the khatian jamabandi is not confined to raiyati lands, the entry in this khatian jamabandi of kharposh mukarrari lands does not show that they are raiyati lands, and if according to the rules of the settlement department, in force, under-tenancies are not to be recorded, it must be taken that the tenants entered against the sub-numbers are raiyats and consequently the kharposhdar is a tenure-holder and his interest is transferable. ——Tenure held by villagers as a body—Khatedar —Right of alienation.

At the time of the first Settlement in Berar it was not uncommon for villagers residing in the villages in their province to apply for and obtain from Government fields on the full survey assessment to be used as grazing grounds the village cattle. As the fields were let on assessment it was necessary to have a khatedar or person responsible for that assessment and therefore such fields were entered in the name of a particular villager though they were in reality the property of the villagers as a body. They collected among themselves the annual assessment and paid it to the khatedar who in turn paid it to Government. Under such circumstances an alienation by the khatedar is void, provided that the alienee knew the want of title in the transferor. (Prideaux, A.J.C.). ——Karamkari and Adimayavana tenures.

The inference of prima facie inalienability from the right of reversion in the landlord is not a necessary or valid inference at all. A permanent right of cultivation does not imply inalienability. No inference of inalienability by custom arises in the case of Karamkari and Adimayavana tenures. The method of inferring the existence of new incidents for a tenure as the supposed logical result of its known incident seems to be quite an unsafe method to adopt. To find out if any particular right is a customary incident of a tenure, the only safe method is to take evidence of the custom, in the absence of authoritative rulings or statements about it. ——Possession and assessment, as evidence of title.

The fact that a certain piece of land has not been assessed to revenue is no proof that it has not been cultivated. Nor does the failure to assess take away the plaintiff's possessory right if by actual possession he has acquired such a right. The Revenue Rules permit any person to enter into possession for the purpose of cultivation, of any Government waste land, but provided that if he does so, he shall be liable to be assessed to revenue and to be evicted by the Government. It is for the Government through its officers, to assess to revenue and not for the cultivator to see that he is so assessed. The fact that one of the contestants has been assessed to revenue and the other has not, is no doubt a relevant fact, and there may be cases in which it will suffice to turn the scale, but it is not in itself conclusive nor is assessment a recognition by the Government of a trespasser's possession. Hence, the fact that the plaintiff was not assessed for the land in dispute and the further fact, that defendant ultimately was so assessed, do not by themselves establish plaintiff's want of title. ——Co-sharers—"Hissedar"

A hissedar means a co sharer, that is to say, a person who owns a share in the mahal. A 'mahal' is ordinarily divided into 'annas' and 'pies' share or into 'bighas' and 'biswas' share. It comprises a certain specified area. A person who owns a fractional share in the 16 annas or a fractional share in the 20 biswas necessarily owns a share in the joint Khalsa land as a co-sharer. But there may be proprietors, who have proprietary interests in the mahal and yet do not own a fractional share of the 16 annas or of the 20 biswas, as the case may be.

But where the entire 16 annas comprised in the mahal was exhausted by one group of co sharers, the other groups, though proprietors, could not be called co-sharers, that is, persons who owned specified shares in the 16 annas. ———Tenant or under-proprietor.

Where the wording of the patta does more than suggest that the holder is an under-proprietor and not a tenant, and there is evidence that the holder managed the cultivated and uncultivated lands, exercised rights of escheat, allowed tenants to settle in the village, to plant trees, to sink wells, and this the holder or his predecessor has done as far back as the memory of man can go, at least from a period prior to annexation, the inevitable conclusion is that the holder is an under-proprietor and not tenant or thekadar. It was contended that because of the given conditions B was not entitled to a refund.

Held, that the stipulations did not in any way take away from the lessee the ordinary rights that he had of being put in possession and in default thereof claiming a rescission of the contract. (Mukerji and Mullick, JJ.). AHAMADAR RAHAMAN v. JAMINIRANJAN. 37 Cal. 114=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 385.

——— Occupancy rights—Claim to.

A lease from 1914 to 1923 Sambat demised for the year 1914, 25 bighas of land and nine mahua trees and from 1915 to 1923 the entire mouza including the cultivated and uncultivated lands. It was stipulated that the lessee should cultivate the village, keep the tenants contented, settle himself and cause the tenants to settle therein. It was further covenanted that in the event of the rent being paid till term of the lease, after the expiry of the term, the settlement would be made at a proper increased rent for a certain term with the same lessee and no other. Several times the lease was renewed and contained a clause disclaiming raiyati rights. In the Record-of-Rights, the lessee was entered as bemiadi thekadar.

Held, that it was not correct to say that the lease was a cultivating lease in respect of 25 bighas. It was a single lease for the whole village. Although there was the covenant for renewal, the lease did not contemplate permanency of tenure. The lessee was only a tenure-holder holding under a lease and acquired no occupancy rights so long as the lease continued. 25 W. R. 503; 13 C. L. J. 568 and 20 C. W. ——— Lease of melvaram rights—Liability for village officers' remuneration.

The plaintiff zamindar executed a cowlenama (lease) of certain villages in defendant's favour. It was, in effect, of the right to collect melvaram from the tenants of the villages. The Raja was liable to pay out of the gross yield nine per cent. to the village officers as their remuneration (maniba swatantrams). The defendant-lessee made these payments direct to the village officers. The Government having afterwards fixed salaries in cash for the village officers, the nine per cent. became no longer payable to them by the Raja. The Raja accordingly claimed to recover from the defendant-lessee the nine per cent. of the gross produce, contending that the defendant had hitherto been paying the same over to the village officers as an agent of the Raja and that when the obligation of the Raja to make these payments ceased, the defendant-lessee was thereafter receiving the nine per cent. for the Raja's use,

Held, upholding the contentions of the plaintiff, that the nine per cent. was not transferred to the defendant subject to the burden of paying the remuneration, that the payment was really made by the defendant ad hoc as an agent of the zamindar who was therefore entitled to recover them as soon as the liability to pay ceased. ——— Tenure—Not raiyati interest.

One K executed in favour of B a kabuliyat by which a Sarasari jama was sought to be created in respect of 275 bighas of land. Out of these 275 bighas 160 bighas were cultivated land for which a rental of Rs. 74 was fixed. The remaining 115 bighas were waste land for which no rent was assessed and it was provided in the document that the rent would be assessed therefor when the land would be brought under cultivation. It went on to state that if any market, hat, etc., were established on the land, the landlord would be entitled to make settlements about them separately, and if any portion of the land was acquired for public purposes the landlord would get the price therefor. It further provided that the tenant would enjoy the fruits of the trees on the land paying Falkar and would be liable to pay further compensation if he did damage to the trees, etc. It further stated that if the entire rent for any particular year was not paid in time, the landlord would be entitled to make a fresh settlement of the jama. It stated also that the tenancy that was created was to be heritable.

Held, that the interest created was that of a tenure-holder and not that of a raiyat and the tenure was transferable. (Greaves and M. N. Mukerji, JJ.). BHAGWAN DAS v. BISWESWAR NATH. 100 I. C. 302=44 C. L. J. 434=A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 220.

Held, that the term of the lease taken together and read with the circumstances of the lease amounted to an express prohibition to settle the land with the tenant so as to confer a title extending beyond the term of the lease itself. (Ross and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.). MT. BRIHASPATI v. RAJKUMAR SINGH. 103 I. C. 627=8 P.L.T. 775=A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 401.

Accordingly I give in writing this kabuliyat that I shall deliver the said sanja paddy and straw without variation every year. If I make any default in delivering the sanja paddy, then I shall deliver bari (addition) of two salis of paddy for every map every year."

Held, the parties' intention was that only paddy and straw should be paid as rent. It would be inconsistent with their intention to hold that a fixed sum was agreed upon as that would be wholly inadequate value of the paddy at the date of the suit, and, therefore, in default of payment of the paddy and straw mentioned in the kabuliyat the landlord was entitled to their market value at the date on which they should have been paid and not merely to the sum mentioned in the kabuliyat. ——Lease or usufructuary mortgage.

Under the terms of the deed it was agreed that the Ijaradar should remain in possession of the Ijara property, and out of the fixed annual rent, he should pay Government revenue and road-cess into the Government Treasury every year, should deduct and appropriate to himself certain sum every year in lieu of interest on the Zuripeshgi money and should pay the remaining sum every year as haq ajiri to the owner.

Held, that the haq ajiri payment was not rent, that the deed was a usufructuary mortgage and that the person in possession held as mortgagee and not as a tenant. The haq ajiri was due from him as mortgagee under an arrangement with the mortgagor and was not due from him as tenant, and further that the haq ajiri not being rent, no interest was payable on it, as there was no stipulation in the deed for payment of interest thereon. 1 P. ——In order to determine the character of the tenancy, the Court has to look to the intrinsic evidence afforded by the documents themselves creating the tenancy and if the terms are vague or ambiguous, the Court is entitled also to look to the surrounding circumstances and the conduct of the parties.

Where a large portion of the area covered by the tenancy was tank, and in the documents there was no specific mention of the fact that the tenancy was being created for the purpose of agriculture or horticulture, but, on the other hand, the documents in question spoke of conditions to the effect that the rent would be increased proportionately as the lands became cultivable and also that the tenant would be liable to damages if the productive power of the lands be diminished in consequence of negligence on the part of the tenant and where, further more, it had been found the lands were paddy lands and that there were mango trees on the banks the fruits of which the tenant enjoyed.

——Lease of melwaram rights—Liability for village officers' remuneration.

A Zamindar who was entitled to receive from the cultivating ryots, as his melwaram, 48 per cent. of the produce, 9 per cent. of which was to be paid by him to village officers as pay, executed a cowle to farmers in respect of the said melwaram right under which the cowledars undertook to make the payment to the village officers themselves. Thereafter the payment to village officers was abolished by Statute and the Zemindar thereupon sued the cowledars for the amount which they would have had to pay to the Village Officers, on the ground that the cowledars were only agents of the Zemindar and that they had to account to the Zemindar for the said amount.

Held Per Chief Justice and Coutts-Trotter, J., Kumaraswami Sastri, J., diss.—The plaintiff was not entitled to recover the amount and the only remedy of the Raja was under S. 27 (4) of the Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act of 1894 by an application to the Collector for increase of rent. ——Lessee or under-proprietor.

A document was christened with the name of a 'perpetual lease.' After reciting the area of the lands which were the subject-matter of the deed, the document prescribed a jama of Rs. 102-2-0 annually payable by the lessor, and then proceeded as follows:—"I do hereby agree and reduce to writing that the said 'lessee' having his possession over it shall annually pay the pay of the Patwari and Chaukidar, i.e., the entire amount of Rs. 102-2-0 shall be paid to the Government, and he shall remain in possession and enjoyment of the same generation after generation (naslan bad naslan, batnan and batnan) and shall exercise all sorts of proprietary powers." It was found that the donee and his sons used to pay rent to the donor and her transferee.

Held, the name "perpetual lease" is not inconsistent with a grant of heritable and transferable right in the property which is the subject-matter of the deed in question. The defendants are not proprietors of the lands in suit, but they are under-proprietors, i.e., they possess heritable and transferable interest in those lands. (Dalal and Wazir Hasan, A. J. Cs.). ——Construction—Elements necessary to constitute permanent tenancy explained.

In a suit for ejeotment of the defendants from their homestead situated within Municipal limits the facts found were that the tenancy was 44 or 45 years old, that its origin was not unknown, that the rent was paid uniformly at the rate of Rs. 5-10-0 per year, that there was one case of succession to the defendants from their father and that defendants' father built a house with mud walls and tiled roof, over which there were thatched chalas, and also constructed a pucca staircase and a pucca gateway and the defendants constructed a pucca privy.

——Construction—Permanent nature—Lease for indefinite term—Bemaiyadi lease—Meaning.

The material clauses of a lease were :—

(1) The purpose of the lease was to enable the lessee to erect Gola house and to purchase and sell all sorts of commodities therein, or in other words to open his business therein ;

(2) The lease was not limited for any definite period but that it was a bemaiyadi lease or a lease without any term ;

(3) That the lessee shall not have the power to construct any pucca building without the express and written permission of the lessor and if that stipulation be violated and pucca building be raised by the lessee without such permission of the lessor, he, the lessee, shall be liable to be evicted ; and

(4) In case the lessee went to erect pucca building and to have a pucca well or Indara he shall have to do so according to the advice of the lessor.

Held, that the erection of pucca buildings for the business as well as for the purpose of residence was in the contemplation of the parties with the condition that permission for erecting pucca structures will have to be taken from the lessor, and that under these circumstances the inference is not unreasonable, that the lease in question was meant to be of a permanent character and not from year to year.

The use of the words "Putrapautradi Krame" indicate that it is intended to be a perpetual lease.

In the body of the document there was in one place an undertaking by the tenant to pay the 'Nirdaritjama,' fixed rent, and in another portion the tenant undertook to pay in addition to the 'Dharyajama' fixed rent, certain other sums namely, road cesses and public works cess as assessed and any tax or additional amount that may be assessed or settled by the Government in future in respect of lands of the tenancy. The deed further provided that " when the aforesaid village is measured and Jamabandi prepared, I shall be present before the Amin when required and shall cause the measurement and bring enhancement of rent into effect."

Held, on construction, that this tenancy was intended to be a lease at a fixed rent. The restrictive clauses "the tenant undertakes not to excavate any ditch or tank, prepare bricks, construct pucca buildings and cut down trees, etc., without taking a written order expressing consent from the landlord do not modify the nature of the tenancy. 20 C.W.N. 182; 42 Cal. 305, Rel.; 30 C.L.J. 32 and 41, Ref. (Mookerjee and Chotzner, JJ.). Moreover if in the meantime survey of cultivation be made at any time by the Sarkar then you shall pay without any notice and objections jama of Hasil (culturable) and Santpati (culturable sometimes and patit at others) land in accordance therewith from the said year. You go on enjoying the property with great felicity down to your sons, sons' sons and so on in succession and keeping intact the limits and boundaries on excavating and filling up and making homesteads and gardens and on being vested with right of sale and gift."

A lease of land was granted in 1824 under a rent note which provided for a payment of a yearly rent and that if the rent was not paid, the lessee should be at liberty to remove the structure which he might have made on the property. The lessor never raised any objection when the lessee sub-let the property, on various occasions, viz. 1872, 1883 and 1900,

Held, the lease was a permanent lease which could only be terminated if the rent was not paid.

LEASE—Permanency and heritability.

The disability of a shebait to make the permanent grant is not absolute. —Purpose of.

———House let for school—Leasehold vesting in Government—Lease if determined.

By a lease the lessors let a house to one K for a school. The lease recited that the lessors were agreeable according to lessee's proposal to keep the house on lease as long as the lessee liked, for a monthly rental of Rs. 140 and that the lessee would not be entitled to give up the house before he prepared a house of his own for the school, and that the lessors would not be entitled to take hold of the house unless the lessee gave up the same of his own accord. Subsequently the school was removed to another site and the leasehold land was thereafter used as a hostel for students. The school was taken over by the Government and the lease property was transferred by statute to the Governor of Bengal-in-Council. The question of the amount of compensation to be paid to the lessors thus arose.

Held, that the fact that the physical site of the College buildings upon the adjoining land and that the lease property was being used for the purposes of the College other than the actual teaching in a class room would not be such a cessation of the use of the land for purposes of the College as to entitle the lessors to exercise the right to determine the lease, and that the value of the right existing in the lessors was properly established by capitalising the monthly rent. LEASE—Renewal—Nature of.

———A lease to a company provided inter alia: "You shall keep it as long as you please. You should always keep this land in your possession for the use of your ginning factory. I will not ask it back."

Held, that it was an agreement with a particular company, the original lessees, that they should hold the land as long as they liked. A perpetual lease is determined by the death of the lessee. (4 Bom. 424, Ref.). And on the same principle where the company to whom the land is given for a specified purpose is defunct, the lease comes to an end. The lease is not a perpetual one in the sense that the lessees could do what they liked with the land and any diversion of use of the land from the purpose for which the lease was apparently granted would give the lessor a right of re-entry and therefore in the present case the lease came to an end when the land was no longer used for ginning factory. —Renewal (Clause for)—Construction.

———A lease for a term of years contained a renewal clause which entitled the lessee after the expiry of the original term to a renewal of the lease for a further period or to a new lease on certain terms. The lessee mortgaged his interest in the property and empowered the mortgagee to sub-let the property during the term of the mortgage as the mortgagor himself might have done and also to do all acts by using the name of the mortgagor without reference to him.

Held, that the mortgagee was not an assignee of the term for the renewal of the lease and that as there was no privity of contract between him and the lessor, he was not entitled to demand a renewal of the lease. ———Rights under.

Under a lease with a clause for renewal the lessee cannot claim to ask for a condition of renewal in the renewed lease. The utmost right that he has under the renewal clause is the right for a lease for an additional term of the original lease, after the expiry of the original lease. When the lessor does not disturb the possession of the lessee for another term, the lessee has no ground of complaint. After the expiry of the original lease the lessee becomes a tenant from year to year with a right to renewal for another term of the original lease and the lessor can eject him upon proper notice of ejectment. 5 I.A. 164 (P.C.), Foll. (Walmsley and Chakravarti, JJ.). Held, that what the parties intended was that, if the defendants wanted to occupy the premises after the expiry of 11 years, they could either take a fresh settlement or remain in occupation without a fresh settlement on a rent of Rs. 100 per month which the parties at that time thought would be a fair rent after the lapse of 11 years and that the terms were not penal and therefore they were enforceable. 17 C.L.J. 590, Appl. (Adami and Sen, JJ.). —Renewal—Of part.

——A lease of land contained the clause for renewal in the following terms: "That the said F (i.e., the lessee) his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns fulfilling the covenants and agreements hereinbefore contained and on his part to be performed and yielding and paying at the end and expiration of the aforesaid term of 99 years unto the said United Company (i.e., the lessor) their successors or assigns, the full and just sum of 100 pagodas current money of Fort St. George, then this lease shall and may be renewed for a further term of 99 years upon such terms and conditions as shall be judged reasonable." During the term of lease the lessees transferred their interest in a portion of the property. On expiry of the lease term, they sued for a declaration that they were entitled to renewal for 99 years of the term granted by the said lease as regards the whole of the property demised by the said lease or, alternatively, as regards the part retained by them and specific performance of the covenant for renewal.

Held, that the claim for renewal of the whole was untenable, the lessees having lost interest in a portion of the property and that the covenant was plainly applicable to the premises as a whole and that as the covenant was to renew the lease as a whole, it could not avail the lessees for a renewal of a portion. Simpson v. Clayton, 8 L. Held, there was a clear agreement between the parties that after the expiration of the first period of seven years the lessee was to continue in possession for a term of another seven years on the same condition as before and therefore the period of the Theka was to extend up to the year 1335 Fs. The schedule which was appended to the kabuliyat contains the following. "Instalment of rent 1 bishi, 5 aris of paddy in the month of Magh,"

Held, that the primary intention of the parties was that the rent should be paid in kind, and not in cash, and in the event of failure to deliver it, the landlord would be entitled to damages by recourse to the Court, which would ordinarily be the market price of the paddy. The tenant contended that in spite of this increment, landlord should pay the assessment as he had been admittedly paying so long,

———Permanent assessment.

The predecessors-in-interest of plaintiffs were granted in 1790 the talukdari patta of certain land. The taluk was settled with them permanently and the revenue was to be assessed on the cultivated land which would be ascertained by measurement from time to time. The rate to be paid was an increasing rate up to 8 annas per bigha after which it would remain fixed in perpetuity 1-6th of the area cultivated would be free of rent. The mohal was subsequently surveyed from time to time in 1834, 1850-1, 1877-8, 1888-9, 1914 and additional areas were assessed up till 1914 at the rate of 8 annas a bigha, the full amount mentioned in the sanad of 1790, that is, for about or over a 100 years. Then in 1914, the rate was increased to 12 annas.

Held, that by the patta of 1790 the land within the boundaries specified by the plaintiff was permanently settled with the plaintiff and that the revenue was to be assessed from time to time according to the terms of the patta by measuring the lands under cultivation and was to be assessed at an increasing rate up to the maximum of annas 8 per bigha only and the land was not therefore assessable at 12 annas per bigha. ———Evidence of title to—Duty of lessor—Onus.

A contract for grant of mining lease in certain mouzas provided that if the lessees did not take the lease within a certain period "except for want of the lessor's title in the said mouzas" the deposit would be forfeited to the lessor. The settlement record showed the lessor as zamindar of the mouzas and also that one of them was settled as a brahmottar and the other as a debuttar with tenure holders. Further demand was made by the lessees for production of the deeds of brahmottar and debuttar grants for the purpose of satisfying themselves that underground rights had been reserved to the zamindar and also for execution of an indemnity bond. The lessor replied that no deeds could be traced and that he was not prepared to execute an indemnity bond. The lessees thereupon refused to complete the lease and sued for their deposit.

Held, that the exception clause in the contract referred to title to the underground and not title to the mouzas but it did not increase the obligation as to the title lying on the lessor under general law which included no duty to produce satisfactory evidence of title to the underground before the completion of the lease.

That the onus was on the lessees to show that the lease offered to them was not a secure lease. Moreover the title of the zamindar had not been shown to be such as prevented him from giving the lessees a secure and valid lease. (Rankin, C.J. and Buckland, J.). JYOTI PRASAD SINGH DEO v. H.V. —Transferability.

———Construction—Lessor not bound by lessee's transfer unless security accepted—Lessee has no right of transfer and cannot call upon lessor to accept security.

A lessor stipulated that any transfer by the lessee would not bind him and lessee would be liable for the rent in spite of the transfer and added further that "notwithstanding (the aforesaid provision) if on account of the intricacies of the law any transfer made by you becomes in any binding on me (the lessor), then you and your heirs shall remain bound to pay the fixed amount of rent so long as the transferee will not furnish security in proper quantities of immovable properties to be fixed by me for the due payment of the fixed rent and this shall in no way be varied."

Held, that the passage does not mean that whenever the lessees choose to transfer the leasehold interest, the lessor would be bound to fix the security for the due payment of the rent which the transferee would be required to give and the original lessees would be exonerated from their personal liability to pay the rent. ——Construction—Under-proprietary rights.

The taluqdar, having the superior proprietary rights, executed in favour of K and D a lease of a village which granted them the whole village from year to year and generation after generation (naslan bad naslan). K and D applied to the Settlement Court for a decree that they were entitled to under-proprietary rights and produced the lease before the Settlement Officer who ordered that "their claim was dismissed but that they had secured their end". They were never recorded as under-proprietors nor did they exercise their rights as such until the transfer in dispute was made,

Held, that no under-proprietary rights, i.e., to say hereditary and transferable rights in the village were granted to K and D. The order of the Settlement Officer could only mean that such rights were refused to them. They had therefore no rights of transfer in the village. 14 I.A. 7 and A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 74, Dist. (Stuart, C.J. and Misra, J.). Held, that the rent is fixed in perpetuity. The words "Thicca mokra" in the deed would only strengthen the view and a clause in deed preventing the alienation of the tenancy without the consent of the landlord would not be a conclusive indication that the rent was not intended to be a permanent one. Plaintiff contended in his suit that the agreement was not valid in law or binding on him and that it, being a lease, could only be made by a registered instrument,

Held, the agreement in question was binding. It could not amount to a lease as one of the essentials of a lease, that there should be a consideration to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the lessor, was wanting. There is no question of redemption upon paying off an advance. The lease terminates at the expiration of the term and the lessor may re-enter as on the termination of any other lease.

Where, however, the interest created in the lessee continues after the expiration of the term until the advance, which is essentially a loan and not an advance of rent, is re-paid, the transaction has the essential characteristics of a mortgage. —Admission.

———On point of law, not binding.

An erroneous admission upon a point of law made by legal adviser does not bind his client. ———Authority to refer.

A pleader engaged to act or plead in a suit does not possess the power to refer it to arbitration without express authority from the client. The Court found that the counsel had limited authority and proceeded with the case.

Held, that if a client objected to important matters of account being referred to private arbitration and to a private referee, and if that was done by mistake of his counsel, the Court was not wrong in taking steps to see that the suit should proceed in the ordinary way. Neale v. Gordon Lennox, (1902) 1 A. ——Nature and extent of.

The implied authority of counsel is not an appanage of office, a dignity added by the Courts to the status of barrister or advocate at law. It is implied in the interests of the client, to give the fullest beneficial effect to his employment of the advocate. Secondly, the implied authority can always be countermanded by the express directions of the client. No advocate has actual authority to settle a case against the express instructions of his client. ——As in Burma barristers merely appear because they are advocates, and not because they are barristers, they must be judged by rules applicable to advocates.

To enter into a compromise an Advocate must "act" for his client and no Advocate can act for his client unless he possesses a power of attorney.

A barrister, in Burma, therefore filing only a notice of appearance and not a power-of-attorney from his client, cannot bind the client by a compromise entered into without his express consent unless the client subsequently ratifies it. 64 I. —— Collateral matters.

The authority of Counsel to compromise a suit coram judice in Court is limited to matters involved in the suit and it does not extend to collateral matters. If a bargain is to be made so as to bind a client upon collateral matters then Counsel should take care to get express authority from his client.

In a partition suit where the only point of difference between the parties was as to whether a certain property was joint or dubuttar and Counsel for the plaintiff and the defendant agreed to certain terms of settlement outside Court settling that the attorneys of the parties were to be appointed Commissioners of partition and Receivers of the joint estate and the debuttar property and a certain remuneration was fixed for them, and a decree was passed in terms of the compromise,

Held, that the question whether to appoint a Receiver of the debuttar property was a matter merely collateral to the suit and not within the scope of the general authority of the Counsel and therefore that part of the terms of compromise was, as a matter of law, outside the authority of the Counsel. The fact that it may be a severable part of the agreement was immaterial. (Rankin, C. J. and Mitter, J.). JOHURMAL BHUTRA v. KEDAR NATH BHUTRE. 104 I. ——An Advocate of the High Court in the course of conducting the cause is clothed with authority to compromise a suit in which he has been retained as Counsel and such a compromise would be valid and binding upon the parties even though it had been effected contrary to the express instructions of the client, unless the prohibition had previously been communicated to the other side. But the apparent authority of Counsel is restricted to acts and admissions coram judice or in Court; such acts and admissions out of Court do not bind the client unless in fact they are authorised by the client, or by his agent duly authorised by the client in that behalf. Where special fees were paid to Counsel as arranged by the defendant attorney with the Counsel on the express oral instructions of the client who was informed by the defendant that they would not be allowed on taxation and in spite of such information the plaintiff client instructed the defendant to pay the fees to Counsel,

Held, that plaintiff should not be allowed to recover the amount of those fees from the attorney. But the attorney should make an application to the Judge for an order under R. 32 of Chap 36 for an allowance of fees to Counsel, higher or other than the fees set out in the table embodied in that rule,

Held further, that in view of the special circumstances of the case the Court should exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by Chap. 36, R. 32.

When an attorney proposes or is asked by his client to mark on the brief or to pay fees to Counsel which cannot be allowed on taxation by the Taxing Officer he should, in every case, before marking or paying such fees make it clear to his client that such fees will not be allowed on taxation and he should obtain a letter signed by his client authorising or ratifying the payment of such fees; and if, and when such fees are disallowed on taxation the attorney must adopt the procedure laid down by the rules.

The defendant was the plaintiff's solicitor. He claimed a right to retain out a fund in his hands payable to plaintiff, a certain sum of money he had paid as fee to certain eminent Counsel he had engaged for the client. Held, that the order of the Master was final, that the defendant cannot, several years afterwards, apply to Court to increase the sums allotted, that he can retain only such monies of his clients as, in accordance with the rule of Court, he is entitled to claim against them and that therefore he cannot retain monies which, though he might have spent, was disallowed by the Taxing Officer. ——For services as Commissioner—Impropriety.

Where a pleader Commissioner sued on a mortgage executed in lieu of fees by defendant for whom he was acting as Commissioner,

Held, it is quite incredible that the duties of a Commissioner should be thought consistent with approaching an individual party and getting him to pay sums of money in discharge of an untaxed bill of costs upon the footing that unless this is done the report will not be filed. No such bargain so procured can stand. It is an improper advantage obtained by an officer of Court by abuse of his position as such officer. It is not the case that the Commissioner is the servant of the party at whose instance the Court makes the appointment. The work done is not work done for that party. It is work done for the Court and the right to sue a party at whose instance the Court appoints a Commissioner is not the right to sue a party for whom the Commissioner has worked. ——Notice of.

Where a party attaches a decree, which directs payment of costs to the plaintiff, he has notice by that very fact that the plaintiff's solicitors may be entitled to an attorney's lien on that fund for the amount of their costs. The mere fact of there being a fund in Court is sufficient to give notice to the third party of the possibility of a solicitor being entitled to a lien for his costs. So long as the Court has control over the funds, the lien is not liable to be defeated by a third party, such as the assignee of a decree or an attaching creditor of the solicitor's client, even though the third party had no express notice of the lien. —Misconduct—Advertising.

———A pleader's sending a circular post-card merely giving the address and the name and description of himself would amount to an advertisement on his part and therefore to improper conduct and if in addition he falsely stated that he had been authorized to examine the accounts of waqf properties and to issue certificates by the District Court rather aggravates the case than the reverse. Even if auditing is not strictly legal work, yet this very fact of advertising his readiness to take up that work, combined with his misleading statement that he is a High Court Pleader and seeing that this work is connected with the Courts and has to be supervised by the Courts would result in his getting an improper advantage in legal work over his fellow pleader, who did not descend to such devices. It was improper conduct on the part of the District pleader to issue such post-cards and to canvass for this particular work in the way that he did, and accordingly he has committed an offence under S. 26. ———An attorney was entrusted by one set of clients with Rs. 20,000 to advance on a mortgage of two properties. He deliberately omitted to register the mortgage made in their favour. The result was that that mortgage became useless. The clients afterwards got a mortgage of one of the properties, but they were left without any security on the other, though for some time they were led to believe by the solicitor that they had got a valid security on that property. Further, as regards another set of clients: the solicitor allowed them to advance Rs. 22,000 on the mortgage of this very property without telling them that there was already this other mortgage in favour of the first set of clients which had not been registered, but which, at that date, might still have been registered. A sum of Rs. 3,250 was obtained by the attorneys from the Sheriff upon the representation that the money was due to the landlords, a charitable trust, for the rent of the premises and that if it were received from the Sheriff it would be paid in full to the landlords. The money was due for a godown rented by his client for 10 months at Rs. 325 per month, to keep furniture attached before judgment on behalf of his client. The attorney paid the money to his client for payment, but subsequently upon instructions from his client wrote to the landlords denying liability for rent but that he was sending Rs. 474 as a matter of grace.

Held, that the attorney should have insisted on the client paying the money to the trust or refunding it to the Sheriff, and ought not to have made himself a party to the course adopted by his client by addressing the letter to the trust. As an officer of the Court, he owed a duty to the Court as well as to his client. Though his conduct did not involve any moral turpitude there was a breach of duty which the attorney owed to the Court. The question of negligence with regard to the performance of solicitor's duty must, to some extent, be affected by local conditions and local circumstances as to which their Lordships of the Privy Council might not be perfectly informed. The question as to whether a solicitor is negligent or not in omitting to give effect to a statutory provision cannot be disentangled from the consideration of whether the statute which is involved is one which is of constant and common occurrence in practice, or whether it is one unfamiliar and remote. Held, that there could be no doubt that S reposed confidence in A by discussing the case in a way he did.

The rule as to the exclusion of the witnesses from Court until they have been examined is not without exceptions. It does not extend to the parties themselves in Civil cases so long as they conduct themselves properly, or to their solicitors whose assistance is necessary for the proper conduct of the case. The same rule applies in Criminal Cases. There are even stronger raasons for not applying the rule to the Counsel for the parties who have to conduct the case. (Wallis, C. J. and Krishnan, J.). ——Liability to costs.

Per Full Bench.—The High Court has no power to order a legal practitioner to pay personally the costs of an application or suit except in cases to which S. 35 can be made applicable. (Mears, C J., Sulaiman, Boys, Banerji, Young, Sen and Niamatullah, JJ.). SHANTHA NAND v. BASUDEVANAND. 1930 A.L.J. 402= A.I.R. 1930 All. 225 (F.B.).

——Changing sides.

P, a legal practitioner, acting for his client S, a vendor, sued to set aside an award made in respect of a dispute about conveyance and under instructions from S alleged that the agreement by vendee M to finance S which formed consideration for conveyance being left unperformed by vendee the award which in effect confirmed agreement which was the basis of conveyance was illegal and the conveyance was invalid. Subsequently S sued to set aside conveyance on grounds of undue influence, misrepresentation and inadequacy of or failure of consideration. In that suit P appeared on behalf of M and denied allegations of S and affirmed the validity of conveyance,

Held, that P's changing sides was bound to embitter litigation and be prejudicial to S and that there was a probability of mischief and consequently P ought not to appear for M. ——Mistake of counsel.

Where the Counsel of the plaintiff committed a blunder which was apparent on the very face of the record,

Held, that plaintiff should not be deprived of a decree if as a matter of fact the pleas of the plaintiff were sustainable and the suit should be decided according to the pleas as put forward prior to the blunder by the Counsel. (Dalal, J.C.). DURGA BAKSH SINGH v. JAGANNATH SINGH. 91 I.C. 442 (Lah.).

——Different parties on the same side.

When parties are different they are not bound to engage the same pleader though all the parties may be arrayed on the same side. (Dalal, J. C. and Neave, A. J. C.). MOHAMMAD HASAN v. ALI HAIDER. 85 I.C. 509=12 O.L.J. 1=28 O.C. 8= A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 337.

LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' ACT (1926)—Inherent Powers.

LEGAL PRACTITIONERS ACT (XVIII of 1879 as amended by XV of 1926).

—Inherent powers.

———Per Full Bench.—Inherent powers of the Supreme Court of Calcutta were not conferred on the Allahabad High Court by the Indian High Courts Act of 1861 and no power to exercise inherent disciplinary jurisdiction over legal practitioners independently of the Legal Practitioners Act and the Indian Bar Councils Act now exist in the Allahabad High Court in respect of their professional or other misconduct. —Interpretation and scope.

———Per Full Bench.—The Act does not merely consolidate previous enactments but the whole law on the subject and it does not merely consolidate pre-existing law but also amends it which taken with the consolidation of the same implies both addition to and derogation from the pre-existing law. It is a complete Code in itself as regards the subject it deals with. (Mears, C.J., Sulaiman, Boys, Banerji, Young, Sen and Niamatullah, JJ.). SHANTHA NAND v. BASUDEVA NAND. 1930 A.L.J. 402=A. I. R. 1930 All. 225 (F.B.).

—Nature of proceedings.

———Proceedings under the Legal Practitioners' Act are quasi-criminal and where the facts had already formed the subject of criminal trial which has resulted in an acquittal the principle of "Autrefois acquit" must apply. (Robinson, C.J.). In the matter of MAUNG PO TOK. 88 I. C. 279= 26 Cr. L.J.1111=2 Rang. 491= A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 110.

—S. 3—"Tout."

———Order declaring person to be tout when it is not proved that he is so, illegal.

J gave a petition to the District Magistrate that she had come to arrange a transfer of a case from one Court to another and F took money from her promising that he would engage a pleader and that instead of doing that F ran away with the money. The District Magistrate endorsed the petition to a Subordinate Magistrate for enquiry and report. The Subordinate Magistrate asked the Secretary of the Bar Association about the antecedents of F. The Secretary informed that the Executive Committee of the Bar Association had passed a resolution that F was an undesirable man and did not possess good antecedents. The Subordinate Magistrate held that it was not proved that F was a tout though it might be that he committed an act of cheating. F was present at the inquiry. The District Magistrate stating that he did not agree with this finding declared F to be a tout.

Held, that the proceedings against F were illegal throughout. There had been no allegation that F was a tout. The Subordinate Magistrate did not report name of F as having been proved as a tout and District Magistrate could not declare him a tout. The resolution of the Bar Association was not that F was a tout but only that he had bad antecedents and the resolution was not passed at a specially convened meeting so as to be evidence under Expl. to S. 36 (1) of the general repute of F. The District Magistrate should have heard F which he did not do. Lastly, there was no evidence that F was a tout as defined in S. 3. (Addison, J.). Held further, that though the words "any other reasonable cause" in S. 13 seem to be wide enough to include the case, still the conduct was not such as to justify suspending him from practice. (Brown and Maung Ba, JJ.). G., A PLEADER, In the matter of. 1929 Cr. C. 608= A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 352.

——Prevarication during enquiry for technical offence.

A legal practitioner who had committed a technical offence gave some very shuffling and evasive evidence before the District Judge who called upon him to show cause and his explanation was, to say the least of it, very disingenuous: instead of making a frank admission that he had committed a technical offence and asking for a lenient view to be taken of it, he told some unnecessary lies, shuffled in a very discreditable manner, therby gravely aggravating what might otherwise have been considered an offence of no great magnitude,

Held, that serious notice must be taken of this conduct. The pleader was reprimanded and suspended for two years. (Courtney-Terrell, C.J., Fazl Ali and Scroope, JJ.). In the matter of the DISTRICT JUDGE, MANBHUM v. B., A PLEADER. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 493 (F.B.).

——Threat to Magistrate by a pleader is misconduct—Conditional apology is not of any value.

Letter by a pleader which contains vulgar abuse of the Magistrate, and a demand for an apology, apparently followed by a threat of further proceedings is highly improper. Instructions from a client are no excuse whatever for a Pleader exceeding what is his duty towards the Courts. It is presumed that a pleader knows what his responsibilities are in addressing Magistrates and Judges. A conditional apology by the Pleader for such a letter is valueless. (*Macleod, C. ——Statements gratuitously and unnecessarily made in open Court which contained imputations against the fairness and impartiality of the Court without any foundation amount to professional misconduct. ——Misconduct—Imputation of prejudice to presiding Judge.

A letter written by a legal practitioner imputing racial antipathy to a Judge and charging him with having allowed such feelings to influence him in passing unfavourable orders to the practitioner constitutes misconduct. A belated apology in the High Court was held to be insufficient and the pleader was suspended from practice for 3 months. ——A legal practitioner received money from the Court on behalf of his client and retained it in his own hands without any authority from the client so to retain it. Subsequently he chose to treat it as loan and gave security which he felt himself at liberty to withdraw at his own will and pleasure,

LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' ACT (1879), S. 13— Duties of legal practitioner.

In one case the Vakil was retained by two persons, one a gosha lady and the other an old man. They were the plaintiffs in a suit in which there stood to their credit in Court a sum of Rs. 1,218. The Vakil drew that money out of Court, but did not pay it over to the clients.

In another case, the Vakil appeared on behalf of the defendant in a mortgage suit, the defence was that, owing to the refusal of the plaintiffs to take his money at a time when, defendant was willing to pay it, plaintiffs had inflated the claim by claiming interest throughout a long period when they could have had the money but would not take it. In those circumstances, the client's instructions to the Vakil were to admit that Rs. 760 and odd was due, and he handed that sum to him with instructions to deposit it in Court. The Vakil did not deposit it in Court, nor did he disclaim liability formally for the balance of the plaintiffs, claim and after several adjournments he confessed judgment for the whole amount due,

Held, that in both cases the Vakil was guilty of professional misconduct. (Coutts-Trotter, C.J., Beasley and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.). NARASIMHACHARIAR, In re. 88 I.C. 360=26 Cr. L.J. 1128= 22 M.L.W. 152=1925 M.W.N. 321= A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 797 (F.B.).

—S. 13—Duties of legal practitioner.

——A pleader by virtue of his position is an officer of the Court and it is his duty to protect all minor officials of the Court from any temptation to depart from their duty, (to take a document from record to pleader's house for inspection by his client). Any such conduct on the part of any legal practitioner must be strongly deprecated. ——Tampering with witnesses of other side.

Advocates and Pleaders retained in a case ought to be extremely careful in approaching and questioning persons who to their knowledge have been approached and cited by the other side for the purpose of giving evidence, so as to give no room for any suspicion that they are attempting to tamper with the evidence or with the witnesses. (Coutts-Trotter, C.J., Odgers and Wallace, JJ.). In the matter of N. B. V. S., A PLEADER. 1929 M. W. N. 384 (F.B.).

——Applications for transfer—Statements of clients should be tested by pleader.

Although it is perfectly true in one sense that a legal adviser must accept statements of fact from his client yet in applications for transfer statements imputing prejudice or unfairness or corruption to Magistrates should not be made unless the statements of the client as tested by the adviser are found sustainable, unless they are found to be corroborated and unless the adviser has taken some steps not necessarily to pledge himself for his client's veracity but such as to give him, as a reasonable man, ground for belief that the statements at any rate are such as should be properly investigated. The duty of the legal profession is a very serious one both with regard to applications of this kind and also in respect of pleadings.

An application for transfer drafted by mukhtar contained a statement which would have been considered as a statement that there was such a relationship between the Magistrate and the person who was mentioned as having visited him, as to make it undesirable that the Magistrate should sit and try a case in which the interests of that person were adversely affected. The statement was found to be totally unfounded and untrue,

Held, that the mukhtar was guilty of professional misconduct. (Courtney-Terrell, C. J., Ross and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.). In the matter of S., MUKHTAR, MADHEPURE. 116 I.C. 762= 8 Pat. 575=10 P. L. T. 711= A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 151 (F.B.).

——Warning is not sufficient punishment for defying law—Duties of a Vakil discussed.

Where it is perfectly clear that a Vakil had deliberately taken the law into his own hands and defied the orders of constituted authority, and where he expressed no regret for his past conduct and has given no assurance as to his conduct in the future,

Held, warning would not be sufficient punishment. Advocates and Pleaders are a privileged classed enrolled not only for the purpose of rendering assistance to the Courts in the administration of justice, but also for giving professional advice, for which they are entitled to be paid, to those members of the public who require their services. Their position, training and practice give them immense influence with the public and their example must necessarily have a much greater effect whether for good or for evil than the example of those who do not occupy this privileged position. It is not necessary in order to enable High Court to exercise its jurisdiction that any offence should have been committed, nor is it necessary that what the pleader had done should subject him to anything like general infamy or imputation of bad character. ——Adjournment asked for in good faith—Absence of sufficient grounds for transfer—Pleader responsible for application is not necessarily guilty of misconduct.

Although every application for adjournment for the purpose of a transfer indirectly implies that there is a belief in the mind of the accused person that he would not have a fair trial, an application for adjournment under S. 526 does not always amount to an allegation of partiality made by the accused's Vakil against the trying Magistrate. If an application is made in good faith, the mere fact that it turns out subsequently that there are not sufficient grounds for transfer would not lead to a necessary inference that there was misconduct on the part of the practitioners who were responsible for such an application. ——Telling a lie is misconduct.

The fact that a man is going to be injured professionally if he does speak the truth is no valid excuse for telling a lie: but, it is an attitude which is not uncommon and which is not of the most serious character. It is very different from the case of a professional man telling a lie fraudulently in the sense of wishing to assist his client in deceiving the Court or even wishing to assist his client in a claim that he is making against another. ——Pleader's duty when client putting off settlement of fees.

When the client is, for some reason or other, putting off the settlement and payment of fee, a legal practitioner would be well advised if he served a registered notice upon him in good time intimating to him that if the client did not settle and pay his fee he would repudiate all his responsibility as a pleader. 37 Mad. 238 (F.B.) and A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 327, Expl. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Agha Haidar, J.). ——Signing of Vakalat—Failure to pay fee—No duty to defend case.

Where a pleader signs a vakalatnama on the distinct understanding that a sum paid to him is really in the nature of a part payment, and that the client will settle the proper fee afterwards, and if the client fails to do so, it follows that mere acceptance of vakalatnama cannot cast upon the pleader the duty of defending the case. ——No remuneration paid to pleader—Pleader is not absolved from his obligation to the client unless instructions are expressly repudiated to the knowledge of the client.

The absence of the necessary remuneration does not absolve the legal adviser from his obligations to his client unless the matter is brought specifically to the notice of the client. This must be borne in mind by practitioners, particularly those who have the very responsible duty of appearing for very poor clients and especially in criminal cases. It is not right that a legal adviser should come after a lapse of time and should say it is true that he accepted instructions from his clients but those instructions were conditional upon his receiving his remuneration. P came to Calcutta being desirous of presenting a second appeal. The Vakil was at that time absent from Calcutta and P approached his clerk. Before P left Calcutta, the Vakil who had returned had himself prepared the memorandum of appeal and P had signed and handed over a vakalatnama. P made certain payment before he left Calcutta in respect of the appeal, but he had not paid the whole of the sum. No specific agreement exempting the Vakil from liability in case of non-payment was entered into. The Vakil subsequently left for the muffasil, relying upon instructions given by him to his clerk to file the appeal when the balance of the sum due had been paid by P. The Vakil took no further trouble in the matter. On his return to Calcutta he made enquiries of his clerk and was informed by his clerk that the appeal had been filed although as a matter of fact it was not filed. Shortly afterwards he left Calcutta again having given his clerk instructions to arrange for some one to argue the appeal if it came up for hearing. The Vakil knew nothing of the clerk's deception until he returned on the second occasion to Calcutta. At this time, the negligence, trickery and lies of his clerk were made fully known to him. The Vakil agreed to move an application under S. 5, Lim. Act, and a draft memorandum of appeal and a draft affidavit of the clerk were prepared. But they were not actually filed. All other papers in the case were subsequently returned to P.

Held, that the Vakil had accepted P's vakalatnama and had promised to file the appeal. It was not an ordinary case of negligence. It was in itself grave professional misconduct and a complete disregard of the client's interest. (*Rankin, C.J., C. C. Ghose and B. B. LEGAL PRACTITIONERS' ACT (1879), S. 13—Jurisdiction and procedure.

——Identification must be genuine—Merely clerk's telling practitioner that he identified the person does not entitle practitioner to pose as identifier.

A practice of identifying people is fraught with the gravest risk to the practitioner. It is not enough for a person who comes forward as an identifier to rely merely upon the fact that he has been told by his clerk that he (the clerk) identified the person. This does not entitle the practitioner to pose as an identifier. The identification must be a genuine identification as it involves not only an offence on the part of the legal practitioner against the duties of his profession but also an offence against the State and public funds. ——It is duty of applicant to substantiate his allegations and submit himself to cross-examination.

The proceedings under S. 13, Legal Practitioners' Act (XVIII of 1879), are of a quasi-criminal nature, and in the event of the charge of the professional misconduct being established, the consequences to the legal practitioner concerned are very serious indeed. Such being the case it is the duty of the applicant who is more or less in the position of a complainant to go into the witness-box and substantiate his allegation before producing any other witnesses, and what is more important, to submit himself to cross-examination. ——Evidence in another case incorporated in enquiry—Legality.

"When evidence has been given in one case upon the issues raised in that case nothing can be more dangerous than to take that evidence and apply it to another case in which other issues arise." Where in a proceeding against a legal practitioner for having tampered with the witnesses on the other side the Magistrate in holding the enquiry merely took the depositions already given in the other case and used them as against the pleader.

Held, that the procedure adopted in the inquiry was wholly illegal. (Coutts-Trotter, C.J., Odgers and Wallace, JJ.). In the matter of MR. N.B.V.S., A PLEADER. 1929 M.W.N. 384 (F.B.).

——High Court is competent to take action under S. 13, Cl. (f) after such enquiry as it thinks fit. The section does not require that the enquiry should be conducted directly by the High Court; the enquiry may well be made by a Subordinate Court under the direction of the High Court. The only essential is, as pointed out by the Full Bench in In the matter of Ganapathi Sastri, 19 M.L.J. 504 that notice must be given to the legal practitioner concerned to show cause against suspension or dismissal and the notice must formulate the charges; with great particularity and precision, so as to enable the practitioner to know the charges he is called upon to meet. The final termination rests with the High Court and with the High Court alone, as was pointed out by the learned Judges in Russick Lal Nag, 44 Cal. 639; and even if the alleged misconduct had been brought to the notice of the High Court, without the intervention of the Subordinate Court the High Court is competent and ought in a proper case to take necessary action. ———Misconduct before Subordinate Judge—District Judge can take action—Charge must be precise—Final order is for the High Court.

The District Judge has jurisdiction to deal with the alleged misconduct of a pleader even, if it does not take place in his Court if he is practising in his Court. Section 13 does not limit the consideration of a charge to the Court in which the misconduct is alleged to have been committed. Section 14 does not specify the nature of the materials upon which the Court concerned may take action. It is plain however that if proceedings are instituted, there must be an enquiry supported by legal evidence. What is essential however is that the charge must be formulated with precision so as to enable the legal practitioner concerned to meet the allegations against him. The ultimate order if any, can be passed by High Court and High Court alone, on the materials supplied by the Subordinate Court. (Sanderson, C. J., Woodroffe and Mukerjee, JJ.). A pleader N had two cases to attend on the same day. In one he was an assistant to a senior but in the other he was solely responsible though B a relation pleader of his was also engaged on nominal fees to take notes of evidence. On the previous night N took detailed instructions from his client who was being prosecuted for bribery in the latter case. His relation B was also present but the client remained under the impression that N would conduct the cross-examination next day. On the next day, however, N presented himself in the former case, the client concerned wherein was important and did not attend the bribery case though requested. The former case was being conducted by his senior who was amply provided with assistance independently of N. It was not absolutely necessary for him to be present there. The bribery case was weak, it was then conducted by another pleader and the accused was convicted,

Held, that N threw away the interests of an unimportant client in favour of the interests of an important client and in so doing committed an offence deserving of the most serious censure. (Courtney-Terrell, C.J., Ross and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.). In the matter of N., A PLEADER.

———Mere fact that opposite party happpens to be member of the same profession is not a circumstance which entitles a member of the Bar to refuse to undertake the case against him.

It is very important that men at the Bar should understand that they are members of a public profession. That is by their very calling they engage and undertake to act for anybody who fulfils certain conditions. Therefore if a client comes to them with proper instructions and prepared to pay a fair and proper fee and invites them to undertake a case of a kind, which they are accustomed to do and they refuse, such refusal amounts to professional misconduct and should be punished as such. ———Refusal to take up case merely with intention of not appearing against professional brother is professional misconduct.

A lawyer must, as a general rule, take up a case for any member of the public if (1) a fair and proper fee is tendered to him; (2) adequate instructions are given; and (3) the case is of a class which the lawyer is accustomed to do. No doubt he can legitimately decline to take up the case if, for instance, he has an out-station engagement, or is engaged in some social function, such as a marriage or is incapacitated by ill-health or any reason which a sensible man would recognize adequate. But to refuse to take up a case simply and solely on the ground that the Advocate will not appear against a brother practitioner, or to put forward untrue excuses when the real reason is a disinclination to appear against a brother practitioner, is, in each case, professional misconduct and should be dealt with as such. The reason for the rule is that if lawyers as a body refuse to act against lawyers, they would become a class standing above the law and justice would be denied to the public. (Mears, C. J.). MD. and he may be left no alternative except to hand over his brief to another Counsel so that his client's interest may not suffer. But in a murder case when a Counsel has reason to believe that he would not be available at the time when the case would be called on for hearing, because he has other engagements elsewhere, it is his duty to communicate with the person who had engaged him and to return the fee to him. If it is not possible for him to do so and the pressure of overriding circumstances is beyond his control, then he should try his very best and spend the whole of the fee that he has received in briefing a Counsel who would do full justice to his client's case for the remuneration. 3 Bur. Per Fforde, J.—It is not practicable or indeed desirable to lay down rigid rules of conduct for the Bar. ———Refusing to appear in Court is not the proper course for pleaders when ill-treated by any Court.

Where some pleaders refused to appear in a certain Court in pursuance of a resolution of the Bar Association to boycott that Court as a protest against its ill-treatment of pleaders and proceedings under S. 14 of the Legal Practitioners' Act were drawn up against several pleaders for failure to appear in Court in matters which had been entrusted to them by their clients,

Held, the pleaders deliberately abstained from attending the Court and took part in a concerted movement to boycott the Court, a course of conduct which was not justified. The pleaders had duties and obligations to their clients in respect of suits and matters entrusted to them which were pending in the said Court. There was a further and equally important duty and obligation upon them, viz., to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. By the course which they adopted the pleaders violated and neglected their duties and obligations in both these respects if the pleaders thought they had a just cause of complaint, they had two courses open to them: to make a representation to the District Judge or to the High Court. ——Advising non-payment of taxes or boycott of Courts justifies refusal to issue sanad.

Courts should not consider what the political opinions of anybody are, whether they are members of the legal or any other profession. But while the Courts will always uphold the liberty of the subject in thought or speech, an applicant who comes to ask for the issue or renewal of a sanad, is applying to be treated as a part of the machinery, for the maintenance of law and order in the body politic and to take an active part in administering, for the other subjects of the Crown, the benefits that may be supposed to result from the upkeep of law and order. It is intolerable and illogical that a man should seek to be put in that position, while at the same time he is saying that law and order should be disobeyed, and taxes are not to be paid and that all public offices are to be abandoned, in order to paralyse the very life of the body politic, apart altogether from any other views he may entertain, as to the desirability of the person or the particular members of the Government he attacks, or the particular character of the transactions carried on, in these Courts. A Court would not without stultifying itself, issue a certificate to a man, who, in the same breath that he is asking for it, cuts himself off and announces his intention to do his best to cut off others, from the life of the state. A legal practitioner cannot represent conflicting interests or undertake the discharge of inconsistent duties. When he has once been retained and received the confidence of a client, he cannot accept a retainer from or enter the service of those whose interests are adverse to his client in the same controversy or in a matter so closely allied thereto as to be in effect a part thereof. The rule is rigid and is designed not alone to prevent the dishonest practitioner from fraudulent conduct, but as well to preclude the honest practitioner from putting himself in a position where he may be required to choose between conflicting duties, or be led to an attempt to reconcile conflicting interests, rather than to enforce to their full extent the rights or the interests which he should alone represent. Fidelity is required from all who hold fiduciary relations; they must not lightly enter upon such relationships, but if they do, they will not be permitted to be disloyal and of all species of disloyalty, desertion and adherence to the enemy or to the opposite party in a suit is recognised as the worst. If there is an agreement which is invalid under S. 28, or no agreement at all, the pleader can sue under S. 70 of the Contract Act, and he can get whatever is a fair and just remuneration for the services he has actually rendered. The expression "majority of members present" in the Explanation to S. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act is not the same thing as majority of members voting. ——Whether a resolution passed by a meeting of a Bar Association declaring certain persons to be touts was or was not regularly passed must be determined by reference to the explanation to S. 36, sub S. The Act only requires that "members" shall vote and that the resolution shall be passed by a simple majority irrespective of the rules of the particular Bar Association. Where a petition filed in the District Court to have a person included in the list of touts did not give sufficient particulars as to why his name should be included,

Held, that under S. 36 of the Legal Practitioners' Act it is not necessary that there should be a petition at all, it does not contemplate the case of a party making definite allegations against an alleged tout. There is a sufficient compliance with the section if the alleged tout is called upon to show cause why his name should not be included in the list, provided an opportunity was given to him to rebut the evidence tendered and otherwise to place his case before the Court. S. 36 of the Legal Practitioners' Act creates a special jurisdiction, but does not define the details of the mode in which that jurisdiction is to be exercised. The High Court in the exercise of its discretion can send for the record of an enquiry conducted by a District Judge with a view to drawing up a list of persons proved to be touts, and examine such record and thereafter issue such orders or instructions to the District Judge as might appear to be proper. High Court would not interfere in the exercise of its powers of superintendence; where the sole ground upon which interference was asked for was that the decision of the Dt. Judge was against the weight of the evidence. The intention of the Legislature was not to allow anything of the nature of an appeal against the decision of a competent Court under S. 36 of Act No. 18 of 1879. High Court cannot consider whether the circumstantial evidence relied upon by a Dt. Judge, and set forth in his order, was or was not evidence from which High Court would have drawn the same inference. (Mears, C.J. and Piggott, J.). KASHI NATH v. KING EMPEROR.

A notice was issued on 13th June, 1928, by High Court against a pleader calling upon him to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the Legal Practitioners Act for professional misconduct. Objection was taken by the pleader in view of the Bar Councils Act which had come into force on 1st June, 1928,

Held, that the provisions of the Letters Patent, in so far as they may conflict with the provisions of the Act, were abrogated by S. 19 (2) and therefore it was necessary for the case to be either referred to the Bar Council or at any rate for the Bar Council to be consulted. High Court in its disciplinary jurisdiction has full power to suspend the sanad of a pleader, if he has been adjudicated an insolvent, until he obtains a discharge, if in the circumstances of the case, it considers that the insolvency coupled with the surrounding circumstances supplies a reasonable cause for such a suspension. It is largely a matter of discretion. The Chief Justice receiving an application of this kind can well be satisfied from the circumstances that are put forward that there is no objection to grant an insolvent pleader permission to continue to practise, and in doing so he would be acting on behalf of the Court, but if he considers that the case is one where there is reason to doubt the advisability of granting such permission, he can ask the Government Pleader to bring it before the Court in its disciplinary jurisdiction. LETTERS PATENT—(Bombay), (1865), Cl. 12—"Suit for land"—Mortgage suit.

—Cl. 12—'Suit for land.'

——Per Marten, C.J.—The words 'suit for land' refer to suits to obtain or recover land, or alternatively to suits which substantially involved the recovery of land or its equivalent. The preposition 'for' in the expression 'suit for land' would seem to indicate that the title to or possession of, immovable property must be the primary object of the action but the primary object of a suit to enforce mortgage by sale is money.

Fawcett, J.—A suit to be one "for land" should substantially relate to land and this should primarily be judged by considering what is the nature of the relief sought by the plaintiff. A suit for land grammatically means a suit for possession of the land and also covers suits for title to or compensation for wrong or trespass to land which are properly local "actions".

Per Mirza, J.—A suit for land means a suit which is substantially for land, that is, for the purpose of acquiring title to or control over land. It includes any suit in which a decree is asked for operating directly upon the land. A suit which prays for any relief with reference to any specific immovable property is a suit for land.

Per Blackwell, J.—A suit for land means a suit to obtain or recover, land and does not include a suit "substantially" for land where a question of title to the land may be involved.

Per Patkar, J.—The words "suit for land" mean a suit in which the substantial question is the right to land. (Marten, C. J., Fawcett, Kemp, Mirza, Blackwell, Patkar and Taleyarkhan, JJ.). HATIMBAI HAZANALI v. FRAMROZ. 104 I. C. 8= 51 Bom. 516=29 Bom. L.R. 498= A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 278 (F.B.).

—Cl. 12—"Suit for land"—Suit for declaring charge.

——Suit to declare a charge is suit for land but land being outside jurisdiction Court must have jurisdiction in personam.

Under Cl. 12 of the Letters Patent the Bombay High Court has jurisdiction in personam with respect to lands situated outside its original jurisdiction. A suit by a vendor to declare a charge upon such lands for the unpaid purchase-money against the vendee residing or carrying on business in Bombay is therefore maintainable in the Bombay High Court in its original jurisdiction.

A suit to declare a charge on property in Bombay is a suit for land so as to give the Bombay High Court jurisdiction over the suit which otherwise it would not have. Where the land is situated outside the original limits of its jurisdiction the words "suit for land" must be read as being subject to the qualification or proviso that the High Court has jurisdiction in personam similar to that exercised by a Court of Equity in England and by the Mofussil Courts under C.P.C., S. 16 proviso. —Cl. 14—Construction.

——The natural interpretation of Cl. 14 would be that the words "such causes of action not being for land or other immovable property" are intended merely to qualify the words "several causes of action" that appear just before them. That is to say, in considering Cl. 14 any cause of action which is one for land or other immovable property must be excluded. An application to the single Judge, who has disposed of a second appeal, for a declaration that the case is a fit one for appeal to a Division Bench can be made straightaway orally by the pleader, who thinks that his client should appeal, and that no written application is necessary in such a case. The pleaders should be encouraged to make such an oral application at the time, instead of later, when a written application will be necessary and arrangements will have to be made for a special sitting to hear the application by the Judge, who will probably then have forgotten the facts of the case. Such speed is necessary because the certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal can only be granted by the Judge who passed the judgment against which it is proposed to appeal. ———Appeal from a single Judge's decision—Bench hearing it differing—Opinion of senior prevails.

The natural place to find the rules governing the exercise of the appellate civil jurisdiction over the other Judges of the High Court would be the Letters Patent, while the natural place to find the rules governing the exercise of the appellate civil jurisdiction over the Civil Courts of the mofussil subject to the High Court would be the Civil Procedure Code. The Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court, that is to say, from a single Judge of the High Court. This right of appeal depends on Cl. 15 of the Charter. Appeals under the Letters Patent are governed by the Letters Patent, and appeals under the Code are governed by the Code. Further the Code only deals with appeals from certain Courts and does not deal with appeals within the High Court from the decision of one Judge of the Court to another. Therefore when a Bench of two Judges is hearing an appeal from the decision of a single Judge of the same High Court whether on the original side or the appellate, and they differ in opinion, the opinion of the senior Judge would prevail. 26 All. 10; A.I.R. 1921 P.C. 6, Ref. (Marten and Pratt, JJ.). —Cl. 39—"Final judgment"—Finality of judgment.

——Order in Civil extraordinary application—No final disposal of rights—Order is not a final order or a final judgment.

The substantial portion of the order which the applicants complained of in their petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty-in-Council was really passed on the Civil extraordinary application, but it did not finally dispose of the rights of the parties and the suit was left at practically the stage at which it was when filed.

Held, it cannot be said that this is a final order within the meaning S. 109 (a) or that it is a final judgment within the meaning of Cl. 39 of the Letters Patent. (Shah and Crump, JJ.). SHRINIWAS LAXMIPATIRAO v. HANMANT SHRINIWAS DESHPANDE. 79 I. C. 210=A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 39.

——Pleader accepting client's vakalatnama and papers but not filing the appeal—No specific agreement exempting him from liability in case of non-payment of fees—Pleader also not subsequently trying to file an application to get extension of time—Pleader's action amounts to not ordinary negligence but to grave professional misconduct.

——Clearest evidence of misconduct is necessary under the section.

It is not very reprehensible conduct that necessarily amounts to that professional misconduct which entails the serious result of being struck off the roll of solicitors or suspended, or otherwise dealt with by the Court, and in respect of applications under S. 10 of the Letters Patent the Court cannot be too much careful in scrutinizing the materials upon which the jurisdiction of the Court is invoked. At all times it is a serious matter, and the machinery of the Court ought not to be set in motion, except upon the clearest evidence of professional misconduct. A Solicitor, in re, 1 Ir. ——A suit for judicial separation was brought by the wife against her husband. The parties were members of the Jewish community and professed the Jewish religion. The wife took out summons for an order on the husband to pay to the wife a certain sum on account of and towards the costs of the suit.

Held, that neither Cl. 35, Letters Patent (Calcutta) nor the Divorce Act applied to the case, but the suit came within the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court under Cl. 12, Letters Patent, and the procedure as regards payment of costs was that laid down by C. —Cl. 12—Construction.

——The construction of Cl. 12 upon which all the High Courts are agreed is that as regards suits for land the High Court can take cognizance if the land is situate wholly within the local limits or where the land is situate in part only within such limits if leave has been first obtained; and that as regards suits other than those for land the High Court has jurisdiction if the cause of action has arisen in part only within the limits if the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained or if the defendant dwells or carries on business or personally works for gain within these limits. —Cl. 12—Jurisdiction, extent of.

——High Court has jurisdiction to pass a decree in personam regarding property outside its jurisdiction—But Court will not pass a decree unless it is enforceable effectively by personal obedience.

Both in India and in England the High Courts, for the purpose of doing equity, possess jurisdiction to pass decrees in personam which may affect immovable property situate beyond the jurisdiction of the Court. But while this jurisdiction in equity is to be exercised at the discretion of the Court, the Court will act in compliance with limitations upon its discretion which have long been established. Moreover, the Court will not pass a decree in personam which indirectly affects foreign land unless the decree can effectively be enforced by the personal obedience of the defendant within the jurisdiction. It will not pass a decree that will operate in the Courts loci situs merely as a brutum fulmen (law which is not respected or obeyed.) (Page, J.). GOKUL DAS v. CHAGAN LAL. 104 I. —Cl. 12—"Suit for land"—Administration of trust.

——If a suit is brought for the administration of a trust which inter alia relates to immovable property situate outside the jurisdiction of the High Court, and the only relief sought is that the trustee should be ordered duly to carry out the trust, the suit is not a suit for land. But if the relief claimed is not confined to an order for the enforcement of the trust, and the applicant claims, e.g., a declaration of his right to the possession of trust properties situate outside the jurisdiction, then the suit would be a suit for land, and the Court would have no jurisdiction to entertain it. —Cl. 12—"Suit for land"—Originating summons.

——The expression "suit for land and other immovable property" in Cl. 12 means suits in which having regard to the issue raised in the pleadings the decree or order will effect directly the proprietary or possessory title to land or other immovable property.

Where the substantial objects for which the originating summons is taken out are claims inter alia that plaintiff is entitled to whole of residuary estate of the testator and that certain dedications of properties made debutter under a will is void and construction of a will is sought merely in furtherance thereof, the proceeding is "a suit for land," for if the Court determines these issues the orders made thereon will necessarily affect title to immovable property situate outside jurisdiction. 29 Bom. 249 and A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 768, Ref. (Page, J.). —Cl. 12—"Suit for land"—Share in sale proceeds of house.

——"Suit for land" means a suit in which having regard to issues the decree will affect directly title to immovable property—Suit claiming share in sale proceeds of ancestral dwelling house is not a suit for land.

The term "suits for land or other immovable property" is not limited to suits in which the plaintiff seeks to recover possession of land or other immovable property, but means suits in which, having regard to the issues raised in the pleadings, the decree or order will affect directly the proprietary or possessory title to land or other immovable property.

Where the claim is to a share of the proceeds resulting from the sale of an ancestral dwelling house outside the High Court's jurisdiction, the suit is not "a suit for land or other immovable property" within Cl. 12. ———Proceeding commenced by taking out originating summons is suit.

A proceeding which is commenced by taking out an originating summons supported by an affidavit is a suit within the meaning of that term in Cl. 12. The term "suit" in Cl. 12 is not to be construed in a restricted sense. An originating summons is therefore to be deemed a suit. The amendment to Cl. 15, Letters Patent, came into force on 14th January, 1928. Application for certificate under the amended clause was refused. An appeal having been preferred against this order, Held, that certificate is a condition attached by the amending Letters Patent only to the case of a judgment of a single Judge and the right of appeal given in the case of a difference of opinion where the Judges are equally divided is dealt with in the amended Letters Patent by being deleted altogether. No appeal therefore lay from the refusal to grant such a certificate. (Rankin, C. J., C. C. Ghose,

——Suit on behalf of a lunatic—Application to take plaint off the file—Dismissal—Order of, is not a 'judgment.'

Where in a suit instituted on behalf of a lunatic defendant applied for plaint being taken off the file or for an inquiry whether it was properly instituted and whether it was for the benefit of the lunatic and the trial Judge dismissed the application on the ground that on evidence before him that can be given upon a mere interlocutory application, he was not prepared to hold that the suit was mala fide or entirely unsubstantial so that there would be an abuse of the process of Court and the defendant appealed under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent,

Held, that the order dismissing the application was not a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15, Letters Patent, as it does not determine right or of the liability affecting the merits of the controversy between the parties. 8 Bom. —Cl. 25—Procedure.

——The initial step is for the trial Judge to reserve a point of law or for the Advocate-General to grant a certificate. The successive stages of the process which follows inevitably may be enumerated :—

(i) The Court reviews the entire case or such part of it as may be necessary.

(ii) The Court finally determines the point or points of law reserved or certified.

(iii) The Court thereupon alters the sentence passed by the Trial Court.

(iv) The Court passes such judgment and sentence as shall seem right to the Court.

The term " thereupon " must be construed with reference to the context ; and it may, with good reason, be interpreted as equivalent to "upon final determination of the point of law reserved or certified in favour of the prisoner." It is not necessary that the contention of the prisoner should succeed in its entirety ; if the opinion of the trial Judge on the point reserved or certified, which forms an ingredient of the reasons for conviction and sentence, is not supported, the conviction cannot be sustained, and it then becomes open to the Court to alter the sentences passed by the trial Judge.(*Mookerjee, Richardson, C.C. ——Where a Judge in his discretion under S. 239, Cr. P. —Cl. 26—Procedure.

——Advocate-General must hear both sides—Allegation by parties must be verified.

Per Mookerjee and Richardson, JJ.—It is clear, on the language of Cl. 26, that the Letters Patent requires that the certificate should reflect the judgment of the Advocate-General and is presumably granted in the interest of justice after careful consideration of all available materials. If that judgment is founded on incomplete materials or inaccurate allegations, its weight is obviously diminished in a corresponding degree. In a case where the error ascribed to the Judge depends on the evidence adduced at the trial, it is plainly desirable that the notes of the evidence, as recorded by the Judge, should be laid before the Advocate-General when he was asked to grant the certificate. The requisite materials can always be obtained on application to the Judge. The Advocate-General must hear not merely Counsel for the prisoner, but also Counsel for the Crown before he grants the certificate. The allegations embodied in the petition to the Advocate-General should be verified by Counsel present at the trial or by other responsible person. (Mookerji, Richardson, C. C. Ghose, Cuming and Page, JJ.). EMPEROR v. BARENDRA KUMAR GHOSE. 81 I.C. 353=28 C.W.N. 170=38 C.L.J. 411=25 Cr. L.J. 817=A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 257 (F.B.).

—Cl. 26—Verdict of jury.

——Per Rankin, C. J.—The verdict of the jury cannot be allowed to stand unless the High Court in review under Cl. 26 be of opinion that the same verdict would have been arrived at, had they been correctly and sufficiently directed. It is not open to direct retrial in such a case. 47 Cal. 671 (F. B.), Rel. on.

Per C. C. Ghose, J.—The word "thereupon" means that the determination of the point or points of law reserved or certified must be in favour of the prisoner before the Court can interfere with the conviction and sentence. If it be found that the opinion of the trial Judge on the point or points reserved or certified cannot be supported it is not open to the High Court to direct a retrial. No doubt the High Court has power under Cl. 26 to examine evidence and determine for itself whether after the exclusion of the evidence or matter which may be considered inadmissible, the residue and the record are sufficient to justify the conviction. The Court will not substitute its own finding for the verdict of the jury. It must consider whether the evidence on record improperly admitted was of such a nature that it possibly may have considerably influenced the minds of the jury and whether it was reasonably certain that the jury would, not might, have acted on the unobjectionable evidence if the wrongly admitted evidence or matter had not also been presented to them. Section 537, Cr. P. Code, has no application to a case under Cl. 26.

44 Cal. 477 (F. B.), Appr.; A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 470 (F. B.), Not appr.

Per Jack, J.—The Court can, on review, examine evidence for itself and determine without reference to the probable verdict of the jury, whether, excluding inadmissible evidence, the residue is sufficiently justifiable for the conclusion. If the Court is convinced on the evidence that the accused is guilty, he should not be acquitted merely on account of a defective charge. The unanimous verdict of the jurors should not be set aside on the mere speculation that certain allegations might have influenced them to some extent when it is clear that the verdict is entirely justifiable by the evidence. Section 167, Evidence Act, is imperative and applies even to the decision of the High Court when exercising its powers under Cl. 26. (Rankin, C. J., C. C. Ghose, Suhrawardy, Mukerji and Jack, JJ.). —Cl. 30—Law applicable.

——Criminal prosecution for damages—Statement in course of judicial proceeding by party thereto—No absolute privilege applies—Same rule applies even under Letters Patent.

If a party to a judicial proceeding is prosecuted for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise, his liability must be determined by reference to the provisions of S. 499, I.P.C. Under the Letters Patent the question must be solved by the application of the provisions of the Indian Penal Code and not otherwise; the Court cannot engraft thereupon exceptions derived from the Common Law of England or based on grounds of public policy. Consequently, a person in such a position is entitled only to the benefit of the qualified privilege mentioned in S. 499, I.P.C.

If a party to a judicial proceeding is sued in a Civil Court for damages for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise, his liability, in the absence of statutory rules applicable to the subject, must be determined with reference to principles of justice, equity and good conscience. There is a large preponderance of judicial opinion in favour of the view that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience applicable in such circumstances should be identical with the corresponding relevant rules of the Common Law of England. A small minority favours the view that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience should be identical with the rules embodied in the Indian Penal Code. —Removal or suspension from practice.

——A conviction under S. 17, sub-S. (1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act (XIV of 1908) constitutes a reasonable cause within the meaning of Cl. 8, Letters Patent, Lahore, for the removal or suspension from practice of an Advocate or Vakil. Strictly speaking, proceedings under Cl. 8 are neither civil suits nor criminal prosecutions. The High Court exercise a special jurisdiction over legal practitioners in pursuance of the authority conferred upon it by the Letters Patent or an Act of the Legislature and has inherent power to apply such rules of procedure as may ensure a fair trial of the matter requiring adjudication. What is essential is that the parties concerned should have a proper notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard. The propriety in law or in fact of the conviction cannot be questioned in the proceedings taken by the Court in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction. 22 A. 49 (P.C.), Ref. Advocate or Vakil may be struck off the rolls for an offence which has no relation whatsoever to his character as a legal practitioner but the mere circumstance that he has been convicted of an offence does not make it imperative on the Court to remove or suspend him from practice. It is not necessary that the act of a legal practitioner which is relied upon for striking his name off the roll should have subjected him to anything like a general infamy or imputation of bad character. 44 Bom. 418 (F.B.); 49 Cal. 732 and 49 Cal. 845 (P.C.), Rel. (Shadi Lal, C.J., Smith and Abdul Raoof, JJ.). In the matter of ABDUL RASHID. 76 I.C. 385=4 Lah. 271= 25 Cr. His suit was dismissed and he filed an appeal and, on the day the appeal came for preliminary hearing, a stay order was again granted on 23rd July, 1921, ex parte. The decree-holder then applied for the discharge of the stay order, praying in the alternative that security for the amount of the decree and costs be taken. The application of the decree-holder was dismissed on 24th March, 1922, and he filed an L.P.A. against this order on 1st May, 1922. It was contended that the order of the 24th March was not a final order within the meaning of Cl. 10, Letters Patent, Held, if that objection is acceded to, it would follow that the appellants would be bound by an ex parte order without power to question that order. Justice would be done by treating this appeal admitted on 15th May as being one from the order of the 23rd July, 1921, and extending the time within which that appeal would have to be brought. ——Determination of question whether suit can be brought 12 years after mutation is a judgment.

If the effect of an order, whatever its form may be, and whatever be the nature of the application on which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause. But it is impossible to lay down any definite rule, and the only thing which can be said is that in determining whether an order constitutes a judgment or not, the Court must consider the nature of the order and its effect upon the civil proceeding in which it was made. Though a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure cannot be viewed as a judgment, it cannot be held that the words "right" and "liability" were used in a narrow sense. The determination of the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to bring his suit after the lapse of twelve years from the date of the mutation is a determination of right, and the adjudication thereupon certainly affects the merits of the question between the parties. The word "only" does not restrict the right of appeal but was intended to make it clear that the forum of appeal in Land Acquisition cases is always the High Court and not the District Court; and that it is immaterial whether the amount of compensation awarded by the Court of first instance does or does not exceed Rs. 5,000 and whether the Court of first instance is the Court of a District Judge or that of a Subordinate Judge or an Assistant Judge. It is beyond dispute that Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent gives in express terms a right of appeal, and that right has not been impliedly taken away by S. 54 more especially when the section is merely an enabling section and was enacted in order to confer a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council. ——Advocate convicted for perjury in England—Disbarment by Benchers of his Inn—Subsequent good conduct—Admission as Advocate in India—High Court is not bound by the decision of the Benchers—Propriety of conviction cannot be gone into.

In an inquiry into the conduct of a practitioner under the Letters Patent, the propriety of a conviction and sentence could not be questioned, though the facts of the case might be considered, to see whether the culpability of the individual concerned was such as to disqualify him for his profession.

It is possible that, where the criminal law of the two countries differs in respect of the matters charged, or in a case where it is alleged that there had not been a fair trial in some foreign country, the above rule might be held not to be applicable.

The Madras High Court is not bound to follow the decision of the Benchers of the Inns of Courts. It has, by the Letters Patent, a discretion vested in it, and it must in every case exercise that discretion itself, giving, of course, due weight to the views of the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn in England.

An order for disbarment is not necessarily final or conclusive for all time and it is open to the Court to re-admit a practitioner, after the lapse of time, if it is satisfied that the practitioner has in the interval conducted himself honourably and the sentence of exclusion has had the salutary effect of awakening in the delinquent a higher sense of honour and duty, so that he may be safely entrusted with the affairs of his clients and admitted to an honourable profession, without its suffering degradation; and in such a case, it is open to the proper tribunal to restore a man to the rolls, whether he be a Barrister, Advocate or Attorney. 6 B. & S. 709 and 12 C.L.J. 525, Ref.

There is a distinction between the original jurisdiction of the High Court and the ordinary civil jurisdiction of the High Court. All applications to the High Court are either civil or criminal. They are original civil when matters come for the first time to the High Court, and they are appellate civil when they come in the form of appeals. The granting of probates or succession certificates will come within the original civil jurisdiction, but it would not come under ordinary original civil jurisdiction, which, by the Letters Patent, seems to be confined to suits and matters under Cls. 12 to 21, which refer to the exercise by the High Court of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. —Cl. 15—"Judgment"—Orders in ancillary proceedings.

———Independent proceeding ancillary to suit but not step towards judgment—Order is judgment.

An order in an independent proceeding which is ancillary to the suit, not instituted as a step towards judgment, but with a view to rendering the judgment effective if obtained, is a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Where during the pendency of a suit by a Mahomedan widow to recover her share in the properties of her deceased husband in the hands of the other heirs an order was passed to the effect that the plaintiff should be paid a certain sum every month for her maintenance.

Held, that an order imposing an obligation of this nature in a pending suit is clearly more than a mere step towards final judgment or a mere interlocutory order necessary for proceeding with the suit and that it is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15. —Cl. 15—"Judgment"—Orders in partnership suit.

———In a suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts, when the suit came for trial, the Court without determining any of the matters in controversy in the suit passed the following order:—"The whole case is referred to the Official Referee to determine what share the plaintiff had in the business carried on by the deceased H, and having determined that to take a full account as in an ordinary partnership action and report to this Court"

Held, that the order is not an interim decree or even a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 15 of Letters Patent. 35 Mad. 1 (F.B.), Ref. (Kumaraswami Sastri, J.). ABDUL WAHAB SAHIB v. M. BOKIA BIBI SAHIBA. 73 I.C. 903=A. I. R 1924 Mad. 406.

———Order on the Original Side of the High Court transferring defendant as plaintiff is not judgment.

A determination, call it what you will, which has the effect, whether on a technical ground or on the merits, of putting an end to the proceedings as regards the particular people or in toto is a judgment and is appealable; but if the pronouncement leaves the suit free to go on, then it is not a judgment within the meaning of the clause. Every order on a contested petition is not a judgment. The line dividing judgments from orders must be drawn somewhere short of this. An order passed on the Original Side of the High Court transferring certain persons from the position of the defendants to that of plaintiffs is not a decision the effect of —Cl. 15—Leave to appeal.

———Second appeal—Decision of single Judge—Leave to appeal—Considerations—Leave whether can be restricted to some points.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as regards the grounds on which leave to appeal should be granted by a Judge under Cl. 15 of the amended Letters Patent against his decision passed in second appeal. The mere fact that there was a question of fact involved in the second appeal or that the second appeal was allowed and the decision of the lower Appellate Court reversed or modified, or that the valuation of a second appeal was not insignificant, is not by itself conclusive for the grant of such leave to appeal. Leave to appeal however may be limited to certain points only in which case the appellant will be confined to such points. Where the decision in second appeal was based on the construction of a deed of adoption which contained certain peculiar provisions.

Held, that leave should be refused. Principles applicable to granting of leave to appeal elaborately discussed. (Ananthakrishna Aiyar, J.). BULLIRAJU v. SATYANARAYANAMURTI. 53 Mad 405=1930 M.W.N. 65=31 M.L.W. 254=58 M.L.J. 388.

—Cl. 15—Leave to appeal—Refusal.

———The intention of the legislature as appearing from Cl. 15 is that a judgment passed by a single Judge in a second appeal after 1st February, 1929, is final and not appealable and that an appeal could be entertained against the said judgment only if the Judge who decided the second appeal granted leave to appeal. If leave to appeal is refused by such Judge no appeal lies from the order refusing leave to appeal. (Case-law considered.) (Waller and Ananthakrishna Ayyar, JJ.) RAMANAYYA v. KOTAYYA. 121 I. —Cl. 15—New point.

———The question, as to the reasonableness and sufficiency of notice to quit given by a landlord to his tenant for a year, is a pure question of fact and not one of law; and so, if it is not specifically raised in the lower Courts it cannot be raised for the first time in a Letters Patent Appeal in the High Court. 3 M.L.J. 222; A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 346; 29 Cal. 203; 31 Mad. 261 and 35 Bom. 407. Cons.; A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 626; 27 Mad. 23 and A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 395, Ref. (Wallace and Srinivasa Ayyangar, JJ., afterwards Odgers and Wallace, JJ.). —Cl. 15—Revenue Board.

———The mere fact that the Civil Procedure Code is made applicable to proceedings under the Act including presumably the proceedings of the Board of Revenue cannot by itself convert the Board of Revenue into a Civil Court subordinate to the High Court unless for some other reason it is a Civil Court subordinate to the High Court, such as is referred to in S. 3, C. P. Code, which it is not. Unless it can be said that the Board of Revenue is subject to the superintendence of the High Court when acting under S. 205 it is impossible to hold that it is a Court suberdinate to the High Court.

The Board of Revenue exercises judicial powers and is in that sense a Court as pointed out in 9 Cal. 295 but that does not make it necessarily an inferior Court subject to the High Court as the superior Court. In the absence of any provisions declaring the Board of Revenue to be subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court it must be held that it is not so subject.

Clause 16, Letters Patent, says that every Civil Court of the Presidency is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. Section 15, Charter Act (Replaced by S. 107, Government of India Act) provides that every Court subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court is subject to its power of superintendence. Reading these two provisions together every Civil Court of the Presidency is subject to the High Court's power of superintendence, in other words, is subordinate to that Court. 9 Cal. 295 (P.C.), Foll.

Revenue Courts, although so designated, on account of their more limited jurisdiction, are nevertheless, properly understood, Civil Courts.

The revenue officers having been by the very terms of the Act, constituted Courts, when hearing certain suits or applications, it is a necessary corollary, that the Board, governed as it is by the same rules of procedure, should also be deemed a Court, when dealing with the same matters at a later stage.

It is wrong to assume that the Courts mentioned in S. 107 of the Government of India Act (S. 15, Charter Act) as being subject to the High Court's appellate jurisdiction, are restricted to such Courts as were in existence, at the time of the passing of the Charter Act or the issue of the Letters Patent. ———Held, (Eddy, J. dissenting) that the word 'decision' in Cl. 26 includes every mental conclusion on which the judgment or charge is based and not merely matters actually stated at the Bar for the direct decision of the Court. —Cl. 26—" Point of law."

———The expression " point of law " in Cl. 26 of the Letters Patent means the same thing as matter of law in S. 418 of the C. P. Code. It includes such misdirection or non-direction as would permit an appeal against the verdict of a jury. And misdirection includes not only an error in laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided but also a defect in summing up the evidence or in not summing it up or in summing it up erroneously.

Per Eddy, J. dissenting.—'A point of law' referred to in Cl. 26 means a point of law submitted to and decided by the trial Judge or any direction as to the law given by him in the course of his summing up to the jury. Although High Court has a very wide discretion in the exercise of its disciplinary powers, nevertheless, in a case where the acts charged were not committed in a professional capacity, and where they involve a criminal offence, it would not ordinarily be convenient for the High Court to exercise those powers until the charges have been investigated in a Criminal Court. ———Order of Judge on original side of High Court refusing to allow person to sue as pauper is appealable as judgment—(Per Heald, Ag. C. J.)—But not where permission to sue as pauper is given.

The word "judgment" in Cl. 13 is intended to cover an order as well as a decree, but the effect of the adjudication must be such as to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with is to put an end to the suit or proceeding. If it has the effect, the adjudication is a judgment, otherwise not.

LETTERS PATENT (Rangoon), (1922), Cl. 13—"Judgment"—Refusal to issue commission.

The order of the Judge on the original side of the High Court refusing to allow a person to sue as a pauper is appealable as a judgment inasmuch as the order put an end to the pending proceeding. A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 41 (F.B.), Foll.

———"Law" means enacted law, the English Common Law and Equity—Published decisions of the Chief Court are not included, (Cunliffe, J., dissenting).

The word "Law" as used in Cl. 17 of the Letters Patent, merely means the legal enactments of the Indian and Burmese Legislatures, the English Common Law and Equity, etc., which was applied by the late Chief Court of Lower Burma. It cannot of necessity be read as to include the published decisions of that Court, which decisions, until merged in an enactment, or used to modify or repeal any enactment, are not, strictly speaking, law. What the clause meant was that the institution of the High Court did not involve any change in the law to be administered by the Court on its Original Side, and that the enactments and the principles of law which would have been followed by the Chief Court should be followed by the High Court. Clause 34 of the Letters Patent applies only to those cases in which the appeals come before the Court by virtue of a right of appeal given by the Letters Patent. ——General rule.

The general rule is that points of limitation should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal where they involve a decision upon questions of fact. Points of limitation should not be decided against the parties unless attention has been drawn to the question of limitation and an opportunity given them to meet it on the evidence.

If limitation is urged as bar, the facts on which it is barred must be proved after an issue has been framed. (Woodroffe and Cuming, JJ.). SECY. OF STATE v. ANANDA MOHAN. 66 I. C. 287= 34 C.L.J. 205= A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 661.

——Revivor by adding another less effective—Remedy not barred.

It would be a reductio ad absurdem to hold that where a party has allowed a valuable right to be extinguished by the lapse of time he should be allowed to revive his right by claiming in his suit another relief which is still within time but is for other reasons ineffective. —Starting point.

——Per Mukerji, J.—The starting point of limitation does not always synchronise with the cause of action in many cases it does, but in others it dates from some specified events which again is either anterior or posterior to the accrual of the cause of action. The periods prescribed by the Act are more or less arbitrary, and the fixing of the periods is founded on consideration of public policy. (Walmsley and M.N. Mukerji, JJ.). It is not necessary for a man to institute a perfectly vain litigation under peril of losing his property if he does not do so.

Her title was disputed by another lady who claimed to be the adoptive mother of the deceased son. The validity of the adoption was challenged by the natural mother and the matter was before the Courts. The estate was being managed by the Court of Wards, and later, by Court Receivers.

Held, that under the circumstances of the case, the beneficiaries under the will were not bound to sue the testatrix's heir, on her death, for the payment of the legacies if and when he might be in possession of assets out of which the legacies might have been payable. 14 All. 47, Ref. (Sir John Edge.) APPA RAO v. PARTHASARATHY. 87 I.C. 324=52 I.A. 214=1925 M.W.N. 441= 3 Pat. ——Plaintiff's share in mortgaged property wrongly entered in revenue papers, to plaintiff's knowledge—Limitation for declaratory suit to rectify error runs from entry—Assertion of plaintiff's title to larger share, by plaintiff's pleader in redemption suit by plaintiffs and defendants, does not necessarily imply a fresh denial of plaintiff's title by defendants giving rise to fresh cause of action. This interest was to be paid month by month, and in the event of failure to pay in any month, compound interest was to accrue on the unpaid interest and the plaintiff was to have a right to file a suit at once, without waiting for the stipulated period of six months. Interest was never paid,

Held, that a suit not brought within three years of the date of the first default of payment of interest was barred by limitation notwithstanding that the plaintiff was entitled at his option not to sue on default in payment of interest but to wait till the expiry of the period of the bond. It is not open to the parties to an agreement to contract themselves out of the Law of Limitation by inserting in their agreement two alternative starting points for limitation. LIMITATION ACT (IX of 1871)—(Repealed by XV of 1877).

—Art. 129—Possession by setting aside adoption.
——Twelve years from the date of adoption or death of the adoptive father.

Article 129 of the Second Schedule of Act IX of 1871 relates to all suits in which the plaintiff cannot succeed without displacing an apparent adoption by virtue of which the defendant is in possession. That article prescribed twelve years as the period of time within which a suit "to establish or set aside an adoption" might be brought, and that such period of twelve years should begin to run from the date of the adoption, or (at the option of the plaintiff) from date of the adoptive father's death. Act IX of 1871 did not give to a reversioner, whose right to sue for possession accrued upon the death of Hindu widow, any further time than the twelve years given by Art. 129 to any plaintiff. —Art. 129—Rights under challenged adoption.
——C. P. Code (1859), S. 15—Adopted son not entitled to present possession—Title recognised within 12 years by adversaries—No suit need be brought.

In 1856, estate of a deceased Raja was confiscated by the Government. Afterwards it was relinquished by the Government in favour of the Raja's heirs in 1862. By the order of re-grant, the estate was to be enjoyed by the Raja's widows during their lifetime, and after them, the Raja's daughter, or failing her, the Raja's next heirs were to inherit the property. In 1863, the senior widow adopted a son to her deceased husband. In 1866, the validity of the adoption was questioned in a suit filed by the other widows. But the decree in the suit expressly refused to adjudicate on the validity of the adoption. The factum of adoption was not disputed by anybody but only its validity. After the decree was passed in the suit, the other widows recognised (within the period of 12 years from the adoption) the adopted son as their son. The decree only decided that the adopted son had no present right to possession and entrusted the property to a receiver who was to be in possession during the life-time of the widows or during such period as the Court thought fit. The daughter of the Raja predeceased the last surviving widow. After the death of the last surviving widow, in 1912, the Receiver filed an inter-pleader suit. The sons of the adopted son were among the contesting defendants. It was contended that their right had become barred under the Limitation Act of 1871, Art. 129 as the adopted son had not sued to establish the adoption within 12 years from the date on which it had taken place.

Held, that the adopted son's right had not become barred, for the following reasons:—(1) Within twelve years from his adoption the same was recognised by those who had contested it. (2) The decree in the suit of 1866 refused to adjudicate upon the validity of the adoption and a suit by the adopted son in face of this decree would not have lain. (3) A suit filed by him for a declaration that under the terms of the grant he was entitled to succeed to the properties as adopted son on the death of all the widows and on the contingency of the daughter of the Raja predeceasing them would be dismissed on the ground that no Court would grant a declaration of a bare possibility which may or may not ripen. (4) The rival claimants in the inter-pleader suit being in the position of plaintiffs would themselves be debarred from challenging the adoption if the adopted son was debarred from supporting the adoption, as the former had not sued within the period fixed by the Act of 1871, to set aside the adoption.

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—Appeal.

LIMITATION ACT (IX of 1908) (As amended by XXVI of 1920, X of 1922, XXX of 1925, I & IX of 1927 and I of 1929, etc.).

—Appeal.

——Where parties' Counsel have been duly communicated the date fixed for delivery of judgment limitation for appeal will run from such date in spite of the fact that neither the parties nor the Counsel were present. (Dalip Singh, J.). B.B. & C. RY. v. RAMASARUP MAHRUMAL. 98 I.C. 942= A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 59.

—Applicability.

——Laccadive Islands.

The law applicable to the Islands is to be found in Regulation I of 1912. The Limitation Act has not been applied to these Islands and therefore time for filing an appeal cannot be extended under S. 5 of the Lim. Act. 13 Mad. 353, Appl. (Devadoss and Waller, JJ.). AHMED KOYA v. KILKKAKKAD AISAMMA. 93 I.C. 341=49 Mad. 519= 23 M.L.W. 636=A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 657.

——Aden.

The Indian Limitation Act extends to the whole of British India of which Aden forms part and S. 16 of the Aden Civil and Criminal Justice Act (Act II of 1864) makes any Act or Acts in relation to civil procedure in force for the time being applicable to the Courts at Aden. (Shah, Ag.C.J. and Crump, J.). ABDULLA MOHOMED v. A.M. ZULAIKHI. 84 I.C. 796=25 Bom. L.R. 1333= A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 290.

—Applicability of general provisions.

——The general provisions of Limitation Act are founded mainly on equitable considerations which apply as much to the period of limitation prescribed by the special Act, as to period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act itself. 34 All. 496, Foll. (Fazl Ali and Chatterjea, JJ.). MOHANLAL HARDEODAS v. COMMR. OF INCOME-TAX, BIHAR & ORISSA. 122 I.C. 810=10 P.L.T. 769= 9 Pat. 172=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 14.

——Quaere.—If the general provisions of the Limitation Act providing for extending the period of limitation apply only to the period prescribed in the schedule to that Act or also to the periods prescribed in special Acts like the Karachi Port Trust Act. (Rupchand Bilaram, A.J.C.). SIND TYPEWRITING CO. v. KARACHI PORT TRUST. 89 I.C. 376 (Sind).

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—Construction.

—Claim of defendant.

——The statute does not apply to the claim of a defendant. (Scott-Smith and Fforde, JJ.). MT. BHOLI BAI v. DWARKA DAS. 84 I.C. 168= 5 Lah. 375=A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 32.

—Construction.

——Favourable to plaintiff.

Courts in dealing with questions of limitation should, as far as possible, place upon the Act a construction favourable to plaintiffs. (Beasley, C. J. and Walsh, J.). SOMISETTI SESHAYYA CHETTY v. ROLLA SUBBADU. 1930 M.W.N. 930= 32 M.L.W. 502=A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 991.

——The statutes of limitation are in their nature strict and inflexible and are not susceptible of equitable construction. (Wort and Fazl Ali, JJ.). NAURANGI LAL v. RAM CHARAN DAS. 11 P.L.T. 403=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 455.

——Limitation Act has to be strictly construed and unless a suit clearly falls within the ambit of the article sought to be applied the decision should be in favour of the continuation of the suit. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Broadway, J.). ASA RAM v. DARBA MAL. 121 I.C. 379=30 P.L.R. 440= 11 L.L.J. 431=A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 513.

——No exceptions should be made on the ground of hardship.

In applying the Limitation Act to particular cases the Courts are not warranted in introducing savings or exceptions which are not found in the statute either because these may be within the reason of other exceptions which are to be found in the statute or because of considerations of mere hardship. 28 Cal. 113, Ref. (Rankin, C. J., C. C. Ghose and Buckland, JJ.). HARI MOHAN DALAL v. PARMESHWAR SAHU. 117 I.C. 343= 56 Cal. 61=32 C.W.N. 971= A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 656 (S.B.).

——Words must not be construed to restrict rights unless so expressed—Provisions cannot be extended to cases not covered by the wording—Form of suit will determine what article should be applied.

Inasmuch as the Limitation Act is an Act which takes away or restricts rights to start legal proceedings it must receive such a construction as the language in its plain meaning imports. 20 W.R. 375 (P.C.), Rel. on. It cannot be interpreted so as to restrict rights unless it is clear that the Legislature intended that this should be done. 5 C.W.N.,

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—Determining article applicable.

355, Rel. on. It cannot also be forgotten that the provisions of the Limitation Act must not be extended to cases which are not strictly within the enactment or do not come within the strict meaning of the words used. 15 Bom. 299, Rel. on.

The object of the Limitation Act is not to create or define causes of action but simply to prescribe the period within which existing rights can be enforced in the Courts of law. 28 Cal. 37, Rel. on.

It therefore follows that whether a particular suit is of the nature contemplated by a particular article must depend upon the form in which the suit is brought and the relief claimed therein; for unless it comes within the wording of the first column of that article in the schedule, the limitation specified in the third column of that article cannot be made applicable to it. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). SECY. OF STATE v. BAGMAL KISANDAYAL. 98 I.C. 22=22 N.L.R. 147=9 N.L.J. 193= A.I.R 1927 Nag. 10.

—Determining article applicable.

———Form of relief does not determine character of suit.

It is not the form of the relief claimed which determines the real character of the suit for the purpose of ascertaining under which articles of the Limitation Act the suit falls. Though the relief claimed in the suit is possession of immovable property, yet if the property sued for is held by the contesting defendant under a sale or other transfer which is not void, but only voidable, and he cannot obtain possession without the transfer being set aside, the suit must be regarded as one brought to set aside the transfer though no relief in those terms is prayed for, but the prayer is only for possession of the property. 13 Cal. 308 (P.C.) and 25 Bom. 337 (P.C.), Foll.; 44 Bom. 742 (F.B.), Appr. (Case-law discussed.) 23 Mad. 271 (P.C.), Expl. (Wallace and Thiruvenkatachariar, JJ.). RAMASWAMI v. GOVINDAMMAL. 118 I.C. 491= 29 M.L.W. 169=1929 M.W.N. 124= A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 313=56 M.L.J. 332.

—Effect on rights.

———Though creditor's remedy may be barred his right is not.

It is well understood that though remedy which the creditor has may be extinguished the debt may nevertheless subsist, and even after the period of limitation for a suit for recovery of the debt has passed, the creditor has a right to receive the sum due to him from his debtor if the latter is disposed to pay him. It is further clear that a payment made to discharge a time-barred debt could not in law be recovered by the debtor. (Lindsay and Sulaiman, JJ.). B. GAURI SHANKER v. PT. SHEO NANDAN. 78 I.C. 911=46 All. 384= 22 A.L.J. 369=5 L.R.A. Civ. 306= A. I. R. 1924 All. 543.

———Limitation bars remedy but does not extinguish right.

Limitation bars the remedy but does not extinguish the right. The defendant, though unable to enforce his right by suit, can still rely upon it as a defence to an action brought against him. Limitation is not applicable to fix the period for which interest on the mortgage debt is payable by a mortgagor to a mortgagee, in a redemption suit in which the mortgagee is necessarily a defendant. 147 P.R. 1890 (F.B.), Foll. (Shadi Lal, C. J. and Broadway, J.). AKHAR HUSSAIN v. RAGHUNANDAN. 8 P.L.R. 1921=A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 351.

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—Nature and scope. —English principles.

—Nature and scope.

———If a mere adjective or substantive law.

Per Page, C. J.—The law of limitation, in so far as it prescribes the period within which litigants are entitled to pursue in the Civil Courts the remedy in which the law provides for the redress of grievances is a part of the adjective law.

Per Carr, J.—The law of limitation is something more than mere adjective law and much more than merely rules of procedure. The effect of the law of limitation is to extinguish after the prescribed period a legal right. The law of contract gives the party a right of suit on a contract. But the law of limitation then adds that this right of suit shall cease to exist after a certain period. The result of the two laws together is to create a right of suit available for a certain time. It may be that after the time has elapsed the party has still a moral right to a relief. But it is no longer a legal one. Thus the law of limitation is just as much substantive law as is the law of contract. (Page, C. J., Carr and Cunliffe, JJ.). (SHAKOOR) ABDUL GANNY v. MRS. T. M. RUSSELL.

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—Nature and scope.

A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 228 (F.B.).

——Rules of limitation are prima facie rules of procedure, and unless there is something special in the rules which justifies a contrary inference, the rules applicable to an application or appeal would be rules which are in force at the time when the appeal or the application is filed. A statute of limitation is retrospective in its operation and governs all proceedings from the moment of its enactment, even though the cause of action might have accrued before the Act came into existence. 35 All. 227 (P. —"Period of limitation."

——Loose and strict sense.

The phrase "period of limitations" can be used in two senses (1) a strict and (2) a loose sense. In the strict sense it means such a period that a proceeding to which it is sought to be applied will be in time, if filed within the period, and beyond time, if filed after it. Sections. 3, 5 and 7 to 25 of the Limitation Act, 1908, apply only to "periods of limitation" in the strict sense such as those prescribed by the schedules to that Act and not to periods of limitation in the loose sense such as that prescribed by S. 48 of the C. P. Code.

In the loose sense it means a secondary period which applies as a further check to an application or suit which is found not wanting when the primary or strict period of limitation is applied. Section 48, C.P.Code, 1908, for example prescribes a period of limitation in the loose sense. (Spencer and Ramesam, JJ.). SUBBARAYAN v. NATARAJAN.

—Principles and scope.

——General principles extraneous to the Act—Examined and explained—No equitable construction.

LIMITATION ACT (1908)—Principles and scope.

The cases which are said to have sanctioned the application of some general principle enuring to the benefit of the plaintiff and extraneous to the Act itself, may broadly be classified into two groups, viz., those in which the starting point of limitation fixed by the statute has been held to have arisen at a subsequent date and those in which it has been held that the operation of the statute has been suspended after time has begun to run. In the case of such of the articles of the Limitation Act in which the starting point of time synchronises with the cause of action, the test is to ascertain the time when the plaintiff could have maintained his action to a successful issue. In such a case, at the time when the cause of action arises there is no person capable of suing upon it, the statute does not run; similarly it is necessary that there shall be a person to be sued; and it is also necessary that the cause should be complete, that is, all the facts must have happened which are material to be proved in order to entitle the plaintiff to succeed. There are cases in which Courts of equity will interpose to prevent the bar of statutes of limitation, as, for example, if a party has perpetrated a fraud which has not been discovered until the statutable bar may apply to it at law. That the enactment is positive is not allowed to be used against conscience, and an equitable tribunal will supply and administer within its own jurisdiction a substitute for an original legal right of which a party has been fraudulently and unjustly deprived. Except perhaps in cases where injustice has been occasioned by a Court by its own acts or oversights there is no scope for the application of any principles of equity in the administering of the statutes of limitation. The Judicial Committee has not, however much the language used by their Lordships in some of the decisions may suggest the same, laid down any such principle as being of universal applicability and all the decisions of the Judicial Committee as well as most of the cases decided in this country are supportable on grounds which are in no sense founded on any general equitable principle extraneous to or unauthorized by the statute. In cases in which the question arises as to the starting point of time for the purposes of limitation, these decisions are mostly reconcilable with a proper appreciation of what the cause of action means when the starting point is the cause of action or with a proper interpretation of the words used in the third column of the articles in other cases; and in cases where the question of suspension arises, if time has once begun to run it never again ceases to run, but there may be satisfaction of a claim or the cancellation of a cause of action operating to suspend the rights of the plaintiff who may, on the removal of the satisfaction or cancellation, avail of a fresh cause of action which arises by reason thereof. The substitution of a new legal right on principles of equity is hardly permissible under the statute law as it stands and a revival of an old cause of action once satisfied or cancelled is foreign to its conception. In applying the principles of limitation the Indian Courts are not permitted to travel beyond the articles and the exceptions and provisos embodied in the Act itself, and apart from the provisions of the Act itself, there is no principle which can legitimately be invoked to add to or supplement its provisions. —Retrospective effect.

———Retrospective unless it confiscates vested right under old Act—If effect of new Act is only to curtail the period it should be given retrospective effect, e.g., suit by a minor under the old and new Acts.

Statutes of limitation cannot be considered as anything else than matters relating to procedure and ordinarily such statutes have their operation from the date fixed in the statute and govern all matters before the Court after the commencement of the operation of the statute. There is, however, one exception and it is that where under the Act as amended the application could not be made the amendment will not apply retrospectively, for the principle is that the effect of an amendment is to regulate and not to confiscate a vested right.

A right to apply under C. P. Code, O. 34, R. 6, accrued to a minor in September, 1908. The mortgagee was under a disability of minority till 23rd September, 1923. Under the old Act the minor could make application within three years of the cessation of the disability. The new Act substituted for this, three years from the date right to apply accrued. On the date of the coming into force of the new Limitation Act the minor had two years and nine months' time under the new Act within which to apply.

Held, that inasmuch as the effect of change was to cut the period within which to apply and not to take away the right, the new Act should be given retrospective operation. (*B.B. —Scope.

———Act is a complete Code—Provision saving bar of limitation must be contained or necessarily implied from the Act.

The Limitation Act, being the enactment of the legislature which has dealt with all matters connected with the limitation of actions, applications, appeals and so on, is really in the nature of the Code. The essence of a Code is its completeness and, therefore, on a proper interpretation and construction of the statute, no Court would be entitled to invoke any principle for the purpose of holding the claim as not barred by the law of limitation which is not contained or necessarily implied in any of the sections or articles of the Limitation Act. ——S. 3 applies.

Although the Limitation Act does not in terms apply to arbitrations in mercantile references it is an implied term of the contract that the arbitrator must decide the dispute according to the existing law of contract, and that every defence which would have been open in a Court of Law can be equally proposed for the arbitrator's decision unless the parties have agreed to exclude that defence. Section 3 therefore applies to arbitration proceedings. Tyldesley's case, 68 L. J. Q. B. 252; Board of Trade v. Cayzer Irvine & Co., (1927) 1 K. —S. 3—Effect on rights.

——The law of limitation as distinguished from the law of prescription merely bars the remedy of the plaintiff but does not extinguish his right. A barred debt can constitute a valid consideration for a fresh contract. Limitation affects only the claim of the plaintiff and has no application to a plea urged by the defendant. The defendant may therefore interpose a demand though barred as a defence to the suit. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Coldstream, J.). SULTAN MUHAMMAD v. LADHA SINGH. 96 I.C. 844=A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 633.

——In the case of a personal action for a debt limitation merely bars the plaintiff from having the particular remedy by way of suit and does not extinguish the debt. ——Pauper suit—When commences.

A pauper suit commences for the purpose of limitation on the day when the petition to sue in forma pauperis is presented to the Court under O. 23, R. 2 of C. P. Code, and not on the day when the application being granted it is numbered and registered under O. 23, R. 2.

The absence of signature and verification in the first instance does not prevent the petition as presented for being properly regarded as an application within the explanation to S. 3 of Limitation Act.

A who was dismissed by B on June 30, 1925, presented a petition for leave to sue forma pauperis for wrongful dismissal on June 28, 1928. There was an endorsement bearing the date June 30, 1928, by the Acting Prothonotary that it was to be interpreted and declared gratis. The petition itself was signed and solemnly declared on July 3, 1928. Leave to sue as a pauper was granted on July 24, 1928.

Held, that the application for leave to sue as a pauper was made when the petition was lodged in the Prothonotary Office on June 28. The signature and verification were not essential in order to constitute an application for permission to sue and could properly be made subsequently. (1887) 4

The general rule is that points of limitation should not be allowed to be raised for the first time in appeal where they involve a decision upon questions of fact. If limitation is urged as bar, the facts on which it is barred must be proved after an issue has been framed. (Woodroffe and Cuming, JJ.). SECY. OF STATE v. ANAND MOHAN ROY. 66 I.C. 287=34 C.L.J. 205=A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 661.

——Limitation applies.

So far as the position of a defendant asserting a right to set off is concerned the limitation bar does apply to him. It applies to him as if he were bringing an independent suit of his own, the only difference being that where he is defending himself by way of set-off, if his claim was not barred at the time of the issue of the plaint, he may prosecute a set-off even although the time may have elapsed before his filing, say, a written statement, claiming the set off. But with that exception as to the terminus ad quem of the period of time, it is the law in India as well as in England that limitation applies to a set off. (Rankin, J.). But the period of limitation mentioned in S. 4 must be understood not only as prescribed in the schedule but also as qualified by Ss. 5 to 22.

—S. 5—Addition of parties.

——In suit and in appeals after time has expired —Effect.

Section 22 of the Limitation Act does not prescribe any period of limitation for the joinder of a party to a suit under S. 32, C. P. Code (1882), O. 1, R. 10 or to an appeal under S. 559 of the old Code (O. XLI, R. 20) and there is nothing to prevent such a joinder in either a suit or appeal even after it is barred by time. Section 22 of the Limitation Act applies to appeals as much as to suits in principle. But a suit in which a defendant is joined, after the period of limitation has expired, must necessarily be dismissed as against him. In an appeal, however, there may be possibly reasons justifying its admission after time under S. 5 of the Limitation Act. (Hallifax, A.J.C.). KUKSA v. DAJIBA BHAU.

———Amendment unconnected with Grounds of Appeal—No extension.

It is not every amendment in a decree which has been made suo motu by the Court that entitles a party to claim an extension of time under S. 5; whether there is sufficient cause for extension must depend on the circumstances of each individual case. If the amendment has no relation to the grounds upon which the validity of the decree has been challenged, such appeal should not be admitted out of time.

Where the only mistake was, that in two suits against the same defendant, the decree which should have been attached to the file of the first case was attached to the second and vice versa, and the decrees were subsequently amended and it was contended that limitation ran from the date of the amendment,

Held, that no sufficient cause had been shown for extension of the period of limitation for the appeal. The grounds of appeals were not based upon the form which the decrees had taken alter the amendment. 3 C.L.J. 188 and 5 Pat. L. ———Whether pendency of application for amending decree saves limitation depends on the facts of each case.

Whether an application for review or an application for an amendment is or is not a sufficient ground for extension of time depends upon the particular facts of each case.

Where the fact, that the application for amendment of the decree was pending, did not prevent the petitioner from presenting his application to the High Court for leave to appeal as a pauper mainly upon the merits of the case, and the question of costs in regard to which the application for amendment was made would have been only one of the grounds upon which he would be entitled to assail the decree,

Held, that the pendency of the application for amendment of the decree was not a sufficient ground for extension of time. (Mullick and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.). UPENDRA CHANDRA v. UMESH CHANDRA. 113 I.C. 580=A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 265.

———Every amendment made in a decree does not necessarily entitle a party who prefers an appeal against the decree to claim an extension of time under the second paragraph of S. 5. If the amendment has no relation to the grounds upon which the validity of the decree is sought to be challenged in appeal, an admission of the appeal out of time cannot be claimed merely on the ground that an amendment has been made in the decree. The extension of the provisions of S. 5, Limitation Act, to an application under C. P. Code, O. 9, R. 9, is not an enactment of a new period of limitation. Section 5 is not in any way amended or repealed. The change effected by the rule under C.P. Code, S. 122, relates to the procedure governing applications to restore suits, dismissed for default, to the file. The application was governed by Limitation Act, Art. 164, and it continued to be governed by the same article. The rule, therefore, extending S. 5, Limitation Act, to O. 9, R. 9 is intra vires and is retrospective. There is a distinction between the procedure in a pauper suit and the procedure in a pauper appeal. In the latter case there is an appeal before Court which was presented within the time limited by law but as no part of the Court fee has been paid S. 149, C.P.Code, gives the Court a discretion to allow the payment at any stage. ———Interference with—When justified.

In matters of discretion a Court of second appeal ought not and ordinarily does not interfere with the exercise of discretion on the part of the subordinate Courts, but that non-interference must necessarily be limited to cases where there is sufficient material on record to justify the exercise of discretion in any particular way. Where, however, it appears that the lower Appellate Court has exercised its discretion in a judicially unsound manner without proper legal materials to support its decision, the High Court will surely interfere.

A memo. of appeal was accepted by the appellate Court after the period of limitation had expired, without enquiring into sufficient cause for condoning the delay in the presentation of the memo. The appeal was accepted on merits setting aside the decree of the lower Court, Held, that the appellate Court acted wrongly in entertaining appeal as it had no jurisdiction to touch the decree, and decide the case on merits on the basis of time-barred memo. A. I. ——Rule newly passed—Ignorance of the rule is sufficient excuse.

Where the Lahore High Court made a rule on 17-10-1917 that in the case of second appeals the memorandum of appeal shall, in addition to the copies specified in O. 41, R. 1, be accompanied by a copy of the judgment of the Court of the first instance, which was published in the Punjab Government Gazette of the 24th October, 1919, as Notification No. 4685-G and the appeals in question were filed on the 30th October, 1919, in other words, six days after the new rule was published in the Government Gazette,

Held, that there is a sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5 for admitting the appeals beyond time, as there had not been sufficient time for the new rule to become well-known by the 30th October, 1919. ——Though an error on the part of an advocate might be sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5 the mistake or error must be a bona fide one, that is, it must have been made in spite of due care and attention having been exercised. Where the advocate does not himself consider that matter and accepts the statement of his clerk that 8 days are allowed for obtaining copies of decree and does not examine the paper himself to see whether the statement was correct, he cannot be said to have exercised due care and attention. ——No doubt a bona fide mistake on the part of a pleader is sufficient cause for admitting an appeal after time, but no mistake is bona fide unless made in spite of due care and attention. ——General rule as to discretion must be applied to each case—Discretion must be judicially exercised and on materials judicially cognizable.

The true guide for a Court in the exercise of discretion is whether the appellant has acted with reasonable diligence in prosecuting his appeal and, that he ought ordinarily to be deemed to have acted with ordinary diligence when the whole period between the date of the decree appealed against and the date of presenting the appeal does not after excluding the time spent in prosecuting with due diligence another proceeding challenging the judgment exceed the period prescribed by law for presenting the appeal. 45 Cal. 94, Foll. There may be a general rule as to the exercise of discretion but each case must nevertheless be examined as to its own circumstances to see whether they make it fall within the terms of the general rule. The discretion in admitting an appeal under S. 5 must be judicially exercised and must be based on materials judicially cognisable though it has been held that a bona fide mistake of a pleader affords sufficient cause for admitting an appeal after time that mistake must have been one made in spite of due care and attention that had been exercised. Fact that the error had escaped the attention of the counsel for the respondents and also that of the Judge does not affect the matter in the slightest degree. The real question is whether the error was one that is in any way excusable or whether it was one which might easily have occurred even if reasonably due care and attention had been exercised by the Advocate. In some cases, no doubt, such as when there is a real doubt as to the forum or the question is for some reason difficult to decide, the fact that it has not been observed by other people may tend to excuse the mistake. But where there was a mistake that can only be accounted for by the fact that no care at all was taken, that no consideration was given to the question as to the forum in which the appeal lay and the very obvious necessity for considering the value of the lands for purposes of jurisdiction was entirely neglected, Held, there is no sufficient cause for admitting the appeal after due date. (Robinson, C. J. and Pratt, J.). TIN TIN NYO v. MAUNG BA SAING. 77 I.C. 385=1 Rang. 584=A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 148.

——Where the only excuse put forward in the affidavit for not filing the appeal within time was that the appellants had no knowledge, before the order of the District Judge returning the memorandum of appeal, that it had to be presented to the High Court but there was sufficient room to hold that they had such knowledge, and the same pleader had been working for the appellants and had filed various appeals rightly, in connection with this case,

Held, the mistake pleaded in this case was not bona fide and extension was refused. (Abdul Raoof, J.). UMRAO BAKHSH v. MALIK MUHAMMAD KHAN. 72 I.C. 782=28 P.W R. 1923=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 612.

—S. 5—Mistake of pleader—Good faith.

When it is established in the first place that a Counsel has given advice with due care and attention but has nevertheless arrived at a mistaken conclusion, and that the appellant, misled by that advice, has in good faith filed an appeal beyond limitation, then when compliance has been made with all these conditions a Court is justified in admitting an appeal filed after limitation, but not otherwise. 28 All. 414 and 29 All. 638, *Held broadly decided. ———Negligence of client's agent is not sufficient cause.

The appeal was decided in the Court below on the 28th March. About 6 weeks later the appellant's agent went to a pleader's clerk and deposited Rs. 6 with him to obtain copies. No instructions were given to the pleader himself. A week later the Subordinate Courts closed for thirty days for the vacation. The copies were not applied for till 27th June, a week after the Courts re-opened, and were obtained on July 3. Even then the copy of the judgment of the Trial Court was not applied for and this was obtained between July 3 and July 5.

Held, that no sufficient cause was proved so as to admit the appeal beyond time. (Daniels, J.). MT. MAHTAB KUER v. MT. BIBHMO. 75 I.C. 254= 21 A.L.J. 817=4 L.R.A. Civ. 580= A.I.R. 1924 All. 176.

The decision appealed against was dated the 20th June, 1921. An application for copies of the decrees and the lower Appellate Court's order was filed on the 27th June of 1921 and those copies appeared to have been received by the appellant on the 9th of July, 1921. The appeal itself was filed on the 4th of October, 1921, and was returned on the same date on the ground that it was not accompanied by a copy of the judgment of the Trial Court. The appellant appeared to have done nothing further in the matter until the 26th October, 1921, when he applied for a copy of the necessary judgment which was ready on the 31st of that month and actually delivered to the appellant on the 7th of November, 1921. The appeal was then re-filed on the 22nd of November, 1921,

———No ground for extension of time.

A woman advised by her pleader filed a suit valuing her claims for jurisdiction and pleader's fee at an amount bringing it within the category of special jurisdiction cases, appeal from which lay to High Court. The case was admitted and registered as special jurisdiction case and was treated as such throughout the proceedings. From the decree in that suit the woman acting on the advice of the same pleader preferred an appeal to the District Court. The appeal was returned for want of jurisdiction and was subsequently presented to High Court. On the day when it was presented to High Court, it was out of time. The woman claimed extension under S. 5.

Held, that there was no likelihood of any reasonable or bona fide belief that the suit was not a special jurisdiction case and the appeal lay to the District Court; that the advice given by the pleader was result of negligence and not of any bona fide or considered belief and the woman was not entitled to extension of time and the appeal was barred. If the appellant succeeds in establishing due diligence, good faith and the absence of neglect, he is entitled to argue that it will be sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5 so as to persuade the Court to extend the time for presentation of the memorandum of appeal

A criminal appeal filed after the expiry of the prescribed period of limitation may be admitted if the Court is satisfied that the appellant had sufficient reason for not preferring the appeal within the period of limitation. But if the appellate Court is not satisfied that the appellant had sufficient reason for the delay, it cannot excuse the delay. If in such a case, the appellate Court desires to help the appellant the proper procedure would be to move the High Court to exercise its powers of revision.

In this case where the lower Appellate Court had extended the period of limitation without being satisfied as to the sufficiency of the grounds for doing so and had admitted the appeal, the High Court in revision refused to interfere as there was no grosss miscarriage of justice occasioned by the lower Court's action. 1 Lah. 508 and A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 662. Ref. (Wallace and Madhavan Nair, JJ.). ——What constitutes.

An appeal was preferred to the Court of the District Judge, but the presiding officer returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court as the value of the claim was below Rs 1,000. Appeal was, therefore, re-presented the same day to the 1st Additional Judge of the District Court, who found that the appeal was presented one day late, but after inquiry held that there was sufficient cause for condoning the delay of one day. He thought that this was not, however, the only thing for him to decide. He considered that he could not condone the delay of eight days caused by the presentation of appeal in the District Court.

Held, that the question of limitation never arose as the District Court and Additional District Judge's Court were part and parcel of the same District Court. No question of the exercise of judicial discretion and condoning delay for sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5, Lim. Act, ever really arose or could have arisen before him ———Scope of Ss. 5 and 14 explained.

Under S. 5 two matters have got to be considered; (1) whether there was sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the time prescribed by law, and (2) whether there are circumstances which would justify the Court in exercising the discretion that is granted to it under that section for extending the time for preferring the appeal.

A revenue officer rejected the application of appellant to adduce further evidence and made final order making correction in the record as against appellant. Appellant first appealed against the portion of the order rejecting his application believing bona fide that he would thereby get the whole relief that he wanted. The appeal, however, was dismissed. About 17 or 18 days after the appeal was dismissed he again appealed against the other portion of the order whereby correction in the record was made against him.

LIMITATION ACT (1908), S. 5—Sufficient cause —What is.

Held, that S. 14 constitutes sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5, but that section would entitle one to the deduction of the period during which the suit or proceeding was prosecuted. A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 156, Rel. on.

Held, further, that S. 14 is not exhaustive of all the circumstances that may constitute sufficient cause. In this case as the appellant acted bona fide in preparing his first appeal, there was sufficient cause for him for not preferring the present appeal within time. And this case is fit for the Court to exercise its discretion under S. 5, since the 17 or 18 days that elapsed between the dismissal of the first and the preferring of the present appeal is not a period which can be called unreasonable or which would show that there was any want of diligence on the part of the appellant in preferring the appeal. The last day for filing an application (19-2-21) was a holiday as a penultimate Saturday. ———Pauper appeals.

An order dismissing the application to appeal as a pauper does not affect the fact that the appeal has been preferred within the prescribed period of 30 days if the appellant has paid the Court-fee in obedience to the Court's order and the presentation of the appeal cannot be held to be after the expiry of limitation and the appellant is entitled to have the appeal heard. There is a distinction between applications to sue as a pauper and applications to appeal as such. In the former the plaint is an integral portion of the application; in the latter the memorandum of appeal is a separate document. A person who wishes to sue as a pauper is expected to put in his application in sufficient time to allow of a suit being filed within limitation, if and after his application to sue has been rejected. In most cases a would-be appellant, who must file his appeal within 30 days, cannot secure a decision on his application within that period. (Le Rossignol and Campbell, JJ.). It cannot be said that there can be no adverse possession of property belonging to minor during the continuance of the minority. It only gives an extension of limitation in favour of the minor after the cessation of disability on the death of the person subject to it.

Where on the death of a proprietor, the widow of his pre-deceased son enters into possession of half the property, mutation in respect of which is effected in her name, during the minority of his second son who subsequently dies she cannot be dispossessed of that share in a suit brought by a reversioner of the son after 12 years of her possession and she becomes the absolute owner of that share by adverse possession in respect thereof for over 12 years. ——Minor born or conceived after the expiry of limitation against all the co-parceners existing at time of sale cannot revive, cause of action.

A son born in a joint Hindu family acquires by birth interest in ancestral property but does not acquire any interest in any right to sue. The cause of action accrues after an alienation when the purchaser takes possession (see Art. 126, Limitation Act), and a new cause of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a son in the family.

The after-born son does not acquire a fresh cause of action and a fresh period of limitation does not start from the date of his birth. In his case the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date of the transfer and when he was not born on that date and was under no disability he cannot obtain the benefit of the provisions of S. 6 of the Limitation Act. He can take advantage of any cause of action existing at his birth and sue within the period of limitation but cannot start a fresh period at his birth. 8 W.R. 285; 4 All. 120, Foll.; 24 O.C. 330; 1 Lah. 558, Ref. to. (Dalal, J.). when the alienee took possession. He is entitled to take advantage of the existing cause of action so long as it subsists, but he does not obtain a fresh period of 21 years from the date of his birth. Even a co-parcener who challenges an alienation does so in virtue of his own independent right as a person who has acquired interest in the family estate by birth. Plaintiffs cannot rely on S. 7 where there was no joint right when the period of limitation commenced; plaintiffs can bring their suit within three years of the date when the co-parcener could have attained majority. 33 All. 654; 1 Lah. 558; 24 O.C. 330; 4 All. 235; 27 All. 704, Foll. (Daniels, J.). ——Subsequently born son has no fresh start for limitation though he can question alienation which was invalid at the time it is made.

Although it cannot be disputed that a subsequently born Hindu son has a right to avoid an alienation which took place at a time when other members of the family, not parties to the deed, were alive, it does not follow that he has a fresh start for the purpose of limitation from the time of his birth. When an alienation is made which is not justified by necessity a cause of action arises in favour of the other members to have it set aside and to recover possession from the alienee but there is only one cause of action in favour of the other members of the family. Successive causes of action cannot arise as new members are born year after year. 33 All. 654; 19 A.L. J.R. 978, Dist. (Sulaiman and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ.). ——Son born after, cannot claim benefit of S. 6.

A son born in a joint Hindu family acquires by birth interest in ancestral property but does not acquire any interest in any right to sue. The cause of action accrues after an alienation, when the purchaser takes possession and a new cause of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a son in the family. In the case of an after-born son the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date of the transfer and as he was not born on that date and was under no disability on that date he cannot obtain the benefits of the provisions of S. 6 of the Limitation Act. A reversionary heir instituted a suit in 1922 to recover possession of the property sold from persons holding under the original vendee:

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation because of S. 6 (3) read with Art. 44 of the Limitation Act. The suit became barred on the lapse of three years after the death of the ward, not withstanding the fact that he was succeeded by a female

Medical evidence in cases of age of a party to a suit which falls to be decided for purposes of limitation cannot throw much light because from its very nature it is based on conjectures only and it cannot possibly be looked upon for the purposes of determining with precision the exact age of a particular person. In cases when limitation is pleaded in defence, a difference of even a single day settles the fate of the case one way or the other, and no doctor, however conscientious and competent he may be, can give the precise age of a person so as to enable the Court to determine the exact date of that person's birth. Plaintiffs brought a suit for declaration to the effect that a mortgage-deed executed by their deceased guardian during their minority was not binding on them. Plaintiffs were members of a joint Hindu family. One of them was major while rest of them were minors. The major plaintiff was the managing member of the joint family and the suit was filed by him on his own behalf and on behalf of the minors. He had, however, filed the suit more than three years after the attaining of his majority,

Held, that the suit of the major plaintiffs and so also of the minors was barred by limitation as the manager (the major plaintiff) could give a valid discharge and acquittance of the claims without the concurrence by the minor members. 38 Mad. 118 and A. Ordinarily limitation runs from the earliest time at which an action can be brought and after time has commenced to run there may be a revival of a right to sue when a previous satisfaction of the claim is nullified with the result that the right to sue which had been suspended is re-animated. Whenever proceedings are being conducted between the parties bona fide in order to have their natural rights and obligations in respect of a matter finally settled the cause of action for an application or for a suit the relief claimable wherein follows naturally on the result of such proceedings, should be held to arise only on the date when those proceedings finally settle such rights and liabilities (Mookerjee and Suhrawardy, JJ.). The respondent's suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on 22nd December, 1915, and the High Court ordered a new trial on 19th October, 1916. Previously on 28th January, 1916, the High Court granted an injunction on condition that the respondents paid 9 per cent. interest to the petitioner from 22nd December, 1915, the date of the dismissal of their suit by the Subordinate Judge. On 28th October, 1919, the High Court finally dismissed the respondents' suit. On 1st October, 1920 the injunction was dissolved on an appeal to the Privy Council being abandoned. The executor appointed by will (but who had not taken probate) mortgaged for his own benefit the debutter property which according to the Will was not to be alienated on any account and the property was purchased at the sale in execution of mortgage decree by defendant. Plaintiff was granted letters of administration so far as the debutter property was concerned and he sued for possession of the property,

Held, the defendant against whom the suit was in time cannot be allowed to contend that the possession of the mortgagor (executor) was adverse to the debutter and to tack on to his own possession. He was clearly a person in whom the estate became vested in trust for a specific purpose within the meaning of S. 10 of the Limitation Act. The adverse possession of a person so situated in relation to the debutter estate is fundamentally different in quality from the hostile holding of a stranger claimant and it would obviously be unsound on principle to tack together the possession of persons who stand in entirely different categories. ——Lease by a trustee for no necessity is not valid beyond his life—Transfer by a trustee is not governed by Art. 134 or 144 of the Act and new shebait can eject transferee.

The language of S. 10 of the Limitation Act gives the clue to the meaning and the applicability of Art. 134. It clearly shows that the article refers to cases of specific trust, and relates to property "conveyed in trust." Neither under the Hindu Law nor in the Mohamedan system is any property "conveyed," to or vested in a shebait or mutwali, in the case of a dedication. Therefore alienation made by either cannot be treated as an alienation made by a trustee under S. 10. A lease without justification granted by the head of the mutt is valid for his life, and if adopted by his successor would endure during his term of office; but neither the original alienation nor the subsequent adoption would create a bar by adverse possession. Possession of the lessee becomes adverse to the successor only on his accession to the office. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) VIDYA VARUTHI SWAMIGAL v. BALUSWAMI AYYAR. 65 I.C. 161= 15 M. L.W. 78=3 Pat. Where the duty of persons is to receive property, and to hold it for another, and to keep it until it is called for, they cannot discharge themselves from that trust by appealing to the lapse of time. They can only discharge themselves by handing over that property to somebody entitled to it. Neither under the Hindu Law nor in the Muhammadan system is any property conveyed to a shebait or muttawalli in the case of a dedication. Under the Muhammadan Law the moment wakf is created all rights of property pass out of the wakf and vest in God Almighty; the curator, whether called mutawalli or sajjadanishin or by any other name, is merely a manager. ——Time taken for obtaining copies of decree and judgment, can be excluded.

In computing the period of limitation under Art. 179 the applicant is entitled under S. 12, Cl. 2 to exclude the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. Section 12, sub-S. 2 is general in its terms and applied to all applications for leave to appeal including an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Under sub-S. 3 of S 12 the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment ought also to be deducted in cases of application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The provisions of sub-S. 3 are meant to apply generally to cases covered by sub-S. 2 and the reason seems to be this that if the appeal in question is from a decree then it is generally necessary that the judgment on which that decree is based should also be obtained. The purchaser did not buy the goods from the seller according to a previous agreement between them; so the seller sold the goods by public auction and sued the purchaser to indemnify it for loss sustained. But the suit was dismissed. Thereupon the sellers instituted a suit for damages for breach of contract. They further maintained that original cause of action remained suspended from the date of award or the filing thereof or of the execution proceedings up to the date of the judgment of the Court of appeal, that alternatively a fresh cause of action for the same amount arose in consequence of that judgment: that their original claim remained satisfied up to the judgment and that they had a right of set off against the sum which they had been ordered to refund.

Per Marten, J.—The two separate Courts of Poona and Wadgaon have a Common Judge; from the 1st to the 20th of each month, the Judge sits at Haveli, Poona, from 21st to 25th he sits at Wadgaon, and from the 25th to 30th of the month he sits at Lonavli a part of the Wadgaon Court. The plaintiff filed his Darkhast No. 284 of 1912 on the 10th April, 1912. He filed it at Wadgaon quite correctly, but as the Judge was then sitting at Haveli, the Court officials apparently sent the papers to the Judge at Haveli, and he on the 11th April, 1912, gave a notice to the defendants returnable on the 14th or 15th April, 1912 in the Haveli Court. The defendants did not appear, and on the 15th April the Judge sitting in the Haveli Court made the warrant for possession absolute Defendants appealed and on the 26th February, 1913 this order was set aside on the ground that the Judge had no jurisdiction to direct the defendants to appear in the Haveli Court nor to make the order against them in that Court. It was accordingly directed that the Court of first instance should take up the Darkhast at the point where it was when the order for issuing the warrant of possession was passed. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, but on 3rd February, 1915 his appeal was dismissed. On 29th June, 1915 the Darkhast was brought on again, the plaintiff was present but as the Judge was away the proceedings were adjourned to the next day. The plaintiff this time was not present in Court and accordingly the Darkhast was struck off. The next Darkhast he filed was on the 7th June, 1916.

Plaintiff obtained a decree for possession on February 15th, 1913. There was an appeal first to the District Court and then to the High Court, which ultimately confirmed the decree on December 10, 1915. He filed his application for execution of this decree on June 28th, 1920. During the interval, however, the defendant filed Suit No. 42 of 1916 for a declaration that the plaintiff's decree had been obtained by fraud. That litigation lasted till July 31st, 1920, and ended in the present plaintiff's favour,

Held, that plaintiff may have been under an honest but mistaken impression that during all this time it would be futile for him to prosecute the application for execution of the decree which was challenged by the suit of 1916. That in a case of this kind it may be desirable that the plaintiff ought to be in a position to deduct the time taken up in defending a litigation of the nature such as in the present case. ——Section 14 does not apply to insolvency proceedings.

The original insolvency petition, was presented by a creditor under S. 6 (4) of Act III of 1907, on June 28th, 1919, to the District Munsif of Razole who had no jurisdiction to entertain it. Having been returned by that Court on September 22nd, 1919, it was represented to the District Court which had jurisdiction under S. 3 on October 1st, 1919, on which date more than 3 months had elapsed since the commission of the act of insolvency upon which the petition was grounded. Thus the petition was liable to be rejected as out of order. But the District Judge, on a petition to excuse delay being presented on February 21st, 1921, acted under S. 5 of the Limitation Act, and holding that there was "sufficient cause" for the petition not being presented earlier, excused the delay and proceeded to enquire into the merits of the case.

Held, that S 78 of the new Provincial Insolvency Act (1920) was not in force on 1st October, 1919, and S. 14 of the Limitation Act does not apply to insolvency proceedings. Hence the order of District Judge excusing delay was wrong. 41 M. 169 (F. B.), Rel. on. (Spencer and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.). AIYAPPARAJU v. VENKATAKRISHNAYYA.

A putni tenure was sold for arrears of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819 on 15th May, 1916 On 29th May some of the putnidars brought a suit for setting aside the sale. During the pendency of this suit the putni having fallen again into arrears was sold on the 16th November, 1916, a second time and the putnidars applied for amendment for setting aside the second sale also. On 21st February, 1918, both the sales were set aside. But the zamindar appealed and the High Court, reversing the decision, confirmed the sales on the 29th February, 1920. In the meantime one of the putnidars instituted a suit alleging that he had an 8as. share in the purchase at the first sale, he having paid one half of the purchase-money and prayed that the second sale might be set aside. On 24th January, 1917, the purchaser withdrew the surplus sale proceeds from Court and subsequantly the plaintiff on 31st May, 1920, made an application for amendment of his plaint adding a prayer for the recovery of one half of the surplus proceeds, ——When the previous suit is decided on merit and not on want of jurisdiction, in a subsequent suit filed after limitation—Section 14 cannot be applied.

Mortgagee filed Darkhast against other properties of mortgagor. The High Court decided that the mortgage decree could not be said to be a personal decree merely because it directed the defendants to pay the amount and that there must be a decree personally made against the mortgagors before it could be executed against property other than the mortgaged property. Thereupon the mortgagee filed an application under O. 34, R. 6 on 10th February, 1920. And the time occupied by the previous darkhast was sought to be excluded in computing limitation under S. 14, Lim. Act,

Held, S. 14 did not apply as the previous darkhast in this case was decided on the construction of the decree and not on the ground of want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature. The decree-holder's proper remedy, if any, was to apply under O. 34, R. 6, for a supplemental decree and not execute the previous decree which had not given any personal relief. ——Plaintiff losing time in seeking apportionment of land Revenue in a Civil Court was held to be entitled to the benefit of S. 14.

Plaintiff who was already the owner of a 12 annas share bought a four anna share of a certain village except a sir field from the defendant. The plaintiff sued defendant claiming proportionate land revenue in respect of the sir field for five years from 1920 to 1926 as fixed by the Sub-divisional Officer in 1925. But before that he had sued the defendant in 1923 for contribution in the Civil Court but there it was decided that a Civil Court had no jurisdiction to make on apportionment. The defendant contended that plaintiff was not entitled to land revenue for the years 1920 to 1923 as the claim was time-barred,

Held, that the claim was not time-barred and the plaintiff was entitled to get the benefit under S. 14, Limitation Act, as before the new Land Revenue Act came into force, the Civil Court had power to make apportionment and the time which the plaintiff spent in pursuing his remedy of apportionment of land revenue in a Civil Court must be deducted. 6 N. A firm carrying on business at Amritsar agreed to purchase 2.00,000 francs from a Bank doing business in Bombay, and paid Rs. 10,000 as margin money. The date of delivery was 30th April, 1923. In its correspondence dated 13th July, 1923, and 6th August, 1923 the Bank admitted receipt of Rs. 10,000. On 29th April, 1926, the firm filed a suit to recover the deposit from the Bank in the Court at Amritsar. In this suit the Bank again, in its written statement filed on 1st July, 1926, averred the acknowledgment of deposit money. On 2nd December, 1926 the Court at Amritsar returned one plaint to the firm for presentation to proper Court. The firm brought the present suit in the Bombay High Court on 29th January, 1927. The Bank pleaded bar of limitation.

Held, that Ss. 14 and 19 should be read together.

Held also, that the period of 29th April, 1926 to 2nd December, 1926, must, under S. 14, be deducted from the period of limitation prescribed for the suit.

Held further, that the statements made in the written statement of 1st July, 1926, and those made in the letters of 13th July and 6th August amounted to an acknowledgment of liability under S 19 and therefore the present suit was instituted prior to the expiry of the period of limitation. 26 Bom 782, Dist. (*Kemp, Ag. A suit for redemption the value of which for the purposes of jurisdiction was Rs. 99, was decreed against the appellant who presented an appeal to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge who, after enquiry, held that the suit was for possession by redemption of "land" as the property in suit was initially land and its character had not been changed by anything alleged to have been done thereon by the defendant. He, therefore, returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court The next day, the appellant filed the appeal in the Court of the District Judge though the presentation was not within time. The appellant claimed reduction of the time spent by him in prosecuting his appeal in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge under S. 14.

Held, that the provisions of S. 14, Lim. It had not been shown that the appellant had any motive for filing the appeal in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge; he honestly believed that the appeal lay to that Court. (Jai Lal, J.). On 10th April, 1912, an application to execute a decree was presented to the proper Court (Wadgaon Court). As the Judge happened to sit in the Court at Haveli he passed orders at Haveli on April 15th, 1912. The High Court on appeal held on 3rd February, 1915, that the proceedings from and after 15th April were without jurisdiction. On the direction of the High Court the application was therefore further heard but was struck off on 30th June, 1915. A fresh application was presented on 3rd January, 1919. The application was in time by excluding the period from 15th April, 1912, to 3rd February, 1915,

Held, that the period should be excluded under S. 14 (2) for the decree-holder ought not to suffer because when the proper proceedings were in the Wadgaon Court, the Judge sitting in the Haveli Court wrongly passed the orders on 15th April, 1912, and the proceedings thereon should be treated as a separate proceeding and pertaining to the original proceeding which was held in the Wadgaon Court. ——A person is not entitled to the benefit under the section when there is not the same cause of action and when the suit is not conducted with due diligence and in good faith.

A Chettiar firm being a partnership of three partners carried on a money-lending business at Thonze by an agent. It made certain advances to a certain person and when accounts were settled between them it was found that he owed a certain sum to the firm. The respondent guaranteed payment of this amount to the firm and gave their agent a promissory note. Two of the three partners sued the debtor to recover the sum. They instituted the suit at Tharrawaddy and they alleged that the defendant had borrowed the sum from their firm at Thonze which is within the jurisdiction of the Tharrawaddy Court. In the plaint they did not refer to the document mentioned above, but they mentioned it in an annexure to their plaint as one of the documents on which they relied.

The suit was filed on the last day of limitation and the third partner—the present appellant—joined the suit as plaintiff later. The suit was found not within jurisdiction of the Court. The plaint was subsequently presented in the Small Cause Court of Rangoon, but before the case came on for trial there, appellant filed an amended plaint in which he claimed to sue alone on the basis of the document as a promissory note. He claimed exemption from the law of limitation on the ground that he had been in good faith prosecuting against the respondent another suit on the promissory note in the Tharrawaddy Court, Held, that as the latter cause of action, which was based on the document as a promissory note, was not the cause of action in the suit as originally instituted and the appellant was not prosecuting the suit with due diligence and in good faith, he was not entitled to the benefit of S. 14. ——Claims in defendants' written statements found against but suit dismissed wholly—The pendency of appeal does not save limitation as to the claims made in the written statements.

The suit was a partition suit. The controversy was between the plaintiff and his son (the 5th defendant) on the one side and the remaining defendants on the other. The question was as to whether the limitation as to the plaintiffs' claim to certain items was saved by reason of a previous litigation in which he and his son (the 5th defendant) had taken part. The previous litigation was also a partition suit by another co-parcener. The plaintiff of that suit claimed on the footing that he had been adopted by a deceased co-parcener. The present plaintiff and his son who were defendants in that suit alleged that the present plaintiff's son was adopted by the deceased co parcener in question, that the adoptive father had been divided from the rest of the family and had left a will. They also alleged that various items were due to the joint family from the father of the plaintiff of that suit. The trial Court found that both the alleged adoptions were false. The alleged division and the will were also found against. As regards the disputed items claimed from the father of the plaintiff of that suit, the trial Court found that some of the items claimed in the present suit were due. But there was no decree in respect of it. As the plaintiff's case had failed the Court dismissed the whole suit. There was an appeal by the plaintiff. The present plaintiff and his son filed a joint memorandum of objections in which they stated that the trial Court's finding as regards the adoption of the present plaintiff's son, the will and the partition were wrong and unnecessary and that his findings about the liabilities and outstandings of the family were not entirely correct. But they contended that the Trial Court having found against the (then) plaintiff's adoption rightly dismissed suit but erred In disallowing costs to them. The (then) plaintiff's father also put in a memorandum of objections in regard to the findings against him about the family's liabilities and outstandings; but that was superfluous as there was neither any decree nor appeal in respect of them. There was no dispute about these matters between the (then) plaintiff and his father. The appellate Court dismissed both the appeal and the memorandum of objections.

Held, that while the appeal was pending, the present plaintiff and his son were not prosecuting their claim in respect of the unadmitted items now in question, within the meaning of S. 14 of the Limitation Act. 43 Cal. 660 (P. But it must be shown that the party can be granted this aid; where the party is guilty of great carelessness and the error committed is not an error which could be committed by a reasonable and prudent man exercising due diligence and caution, the party is not entitled to the benefit of S. 14. 3 O.L.J. 387, Rel. on. (*Stuart, C. —S. 14—Good faith and diligence—Claimants' suit.

——Time taken in prosecuting the previous suit in good faith and due diligence should be excluded.

A person filed an objection petition claiming certain property as his own and seeking to have it exoluded from attachment in execution of a decree. The claim was refused whereupon he field a suit to establish his title. The suit was finally dismissed by the High Court as it considered the application as one under S. 47 against which order they held that the applicant should have preferred an appeal and not filed a suit referred to. The applicant therefore filed the appeal but the appeal was time-barred,

Held, that as the claimant was diligently prosecuting his case, hence time taken in suit ought to be excluded. (Jwala Prasad and Ross, JJ.). JIWAN RAM v. HAZARI LAL. A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 307.

——An appellant acted bona fide in preferring his first appeal, there was sufficient cause within S. 5—His second appeal therefore will be protected.

A revenue officer rejected the application of appellant to adduce further evidence and made final order making correction in the record as against appellant. Appellant first appealed against the portion of the order rejecting his application believing bona fide that he would thereby get the whole relief that he wanted. The appeal, however, was dismissed. About 17 or 18 days after the appeal was dismissed he again appealed against the other portion of the order whereby correction in the record was made against him.

Held, that S. 14 constitutes sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5 but that section would entitle one to the deduction of the period during which the suit or proceeding was prosecuted. A.I.R. 1917 P. C. 156, Rel. on.

Held further, that S. 14 is not exhaustive of all the circumstances that may constitute sufficient cause. In this case as the appellant acted bona fide in preparing his first appeal there was sufficient cause for him for not preferring the present appeal within time. And this case is fit for the Court to exercise its discretion under S. 5 since the 17 or 18 days that elapsed between the dismissal of the first and preferring of the present appeal is not a period which can be called unreasonable or which would show that there was any want of diligence on the part of the appellant in preferring the appeal, (Rankin, C.J. and Mukerji, J.). A promissory note was executed in 1917 in renewal of a prior promissory note of 1914 executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff's father. The plaintiffs' father's sister filed a suit on the promissory note of 1914 alleging that the note was nominally taken in plaintiffs' father's name, with her money and that she was entitled to the amount due on the promissory note. The District Munsif passed a decree in her favour in 1919. Subsequent suit was filed on the 11th October, 1922. The decree in 1919 declared the plaintiff's right and directed the present plaintiffs who were defendants in that suit to endorse the promissory note in her favour. There was an appeal and the Subordinate Judge on 13th October, 1919, reversed the decision of the District Munsif and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. Both the present plaintiffs and the defendant were parties to the previous suit.

Held, that the effect of the decision of the District Munsif was that the present plaintiffs had no right to recover the money due on the first promissory note, and as they were directed to endorse that note to the plaintiff in that suit they could not, when that decree was in force, claim any money on the renewed promissory note till the decision of the District Munsif was reversed in appeal. —Distinct from a fresh application for execution —If section applies to revival.

There is an essential difference between an application for the execution of a decree and an application to a Court asking it simply to revive a previous application made for the execution of the decree. It is to an application of the former class that S. 15 would apply and not to an application of the latter class.

Per Sulaiman, J.—The question of exclusion of time can only arise when a fresh application for execution is made, whereas it is only a previous application which has not been properly and finally disposed of which can be revived. The application for revival is not a fresh application for execution. The principle is based on equity and justice, and the decree-holder is merely to request the Court to take up and continue the proceedings which have not finally terminated, but which have remained in abeyance for some reason or other beyond his control. It is not correct to say that the amendment of S. 15 was intended to sweep away and replace the old doctrine of revival. The two principles are not co-extensive or identical. The application for revival not being a fresh application for execution cannot be governed by Art. 182. The proper article is Art. 181, 42 All. 564, Foll. (*Walsh, Ag. On 7th July, 1917, the execution of a mortgage decree for a sale of a house was first taken out. On September 12th, 1917, injunction was granted restraining the sale of half the house. On 19th November, 1917 an application was made to take a step-in-aid of execution with respect to the other half of the house. That half of the house was sold. The injunction was dissolved on 8th November, 1918. Application for execution with respect to the other half was made on January 10th, 1922,

Held, that the last application was made on 19th November, 1917, and limitation began to run from that date. The only period which the decree-holder was entitled to exclude on account of the injunction was from 19th November, 1917, the date on which limitation began to run, to 8th November, 1918, the date on which the injunction was dissolved. Therefore, the application made on 10th January, 1922, having been made more than 3 years after the date of the last application, after deducting the period covered by the injunction the application was time-barred. Sub-section (1) of S. 15 contemplates the stay of execution of a decree either by injunction or by order; an injunction to stay execution may be issued in a proceeding other than the execution proceedings, while an order for stay of execution may be made by the execution Court itself in the course of those proceedings.

Where a decree is stayed by injunction as to part of the properties and by order of the executing Court itself as to the rest, the decree-holder is entitled to deduct the time during which the injunction and the order continued, the date on which the injunction was issued and the order was made, and the date on which the injunction and the order ceased to be operative. Symbolical possession is as effective as actual possession against the judgment-debtors; and if the judgment-debtors continued in possession even after symbolical possession is delivered to the auction-purchaser, their possession becomes adverse against such purchaser from that very day. The purchaser therefore has a fresh cause of action for instituting the suit for possession against the judgment-debtor, and such a suit would not be one governed by Art. 138, which evidently refers to a case where the purchaser has not obtained delivery of possession, but Art. 144 would apply, and in such a case the period during which an application to set aside sale continued cannot be exoluded. 35 Cal. 209; 25 C. —S. 18—Essentials.

———Mere fraud insufficient — Party defrauded must have been kept from knowledge of his right or title.

It is not sufficient to make S. 18 operative that the cause of action should be based on fraud. It is necessary that the right claimed or the title on which it is founded, should have been kept from the knowledge of the applicant by means of fraud, although it may be that in certain circumstances it could be assumed from the act of fraud itself which gave the cause of action that this act of fraud was fraudulently concealed from the person affected. A judgment-debtor, who gets himself appointed guardian of a minor decree-holder without disclosing his indebtedness to the estate, perpetrates fraud and if he allows the period of limitation for the execution of the decree against him to elapse, he cannot plead limitation as a bar to the execution of the decree. ———Active concealment with intention to deceive is fraud.

If a vendor or a vendee wishes that a sale should not be nullified by a pre-emption suit, it is necessary for him to inform the pre-emptor before the transaction and get his refusal but a mere omission to inform the pre-emptor or the bare fact of concealing the sale transaction from him cannot amount to a fraud, but where there is an active concealment of the transaction coupled with an intention to deceive the pre-emptor there would undoubtedly be a fraud within the meaning of S. 18. LIMITATION ACT (1908), S. 18—Fraudulently keeping from exercising right.

———Not constructive but actual and active fraud.

The fraud contemplated by S. 18 is an actual and active fraud and not what is called constructive fraud. The words "has . . . been kept," in S. 18 point to the conclusion, that in order to constitute a fraud, it is not enough that there should be merely a tortuous act unknown to the injured party but that there must be some abuse of a confidential position, some intentional imposition, or some deliberate concealment of facts: there must be something actually said or done which is directly intended to prevent discovery. If owing to the fraudulent concealment of the proceedings by the decree-holder all knowledge of the proceedings up to the time of sale is withheld from the judgment debtor, then so long as he does not come to know of the sale the effect of the fraud continues and the only conclusion which can be drawn is that he had been kept from the knowledge of the sale in consequence of the initial fraud practised by the decree-holder. It is only after he becomes aware of the sale that he comes to know of his right to apply. (Sulaiman and Daniels, JJ.). MT. SARVI BEGAM v. L. —S. 18—Inference of fraud.

———Fraudulent sale without notice to judgment-debtor—Suit to set aside one year later—Fraud not specifically pleaded—Fraud can be inferred and relief given.

In spite of an order passed in his first execution application that the decree-holder was not entitled to proceed against the shares of the property allotted to a party defendant, the decree-holder again applied by a fresh execution application some time later for the same relief and for the sale of the whole of the property; and without giving any notice to the party defendant had the whole property sold in 1918, and himself became the purchaser; and again without any notice to him the decree-holder managed to get symbolical delivery behind his back. The party defendant came to know about the fraudulent act of the decree-holder only in 1919, when the decree-holder interfered with his possession,

Held, that in the circumstances though S. 18 has been specifically referred to in the plaint, the case would really come under S. 18 and the period before 1919 could not be counted; such an inference could not legitimately be drawn in the particular circumstances of this case, though originally facts bringing a case under S. 18 have to be specifically pleaded. To show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the transaction beyond the period of limitation, such knowledge must be clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the particular fraud. —S. 18—Suppression of process against judgment-debtor.

———Applicability of section—What must be proved—Process fraudulently suppressed—Suit to set aside sale—Sale not known to plaintiff till a few days before suit—Suit maintainable.

When a judgment-debtor makes an application to have an execution sale set aside under O. 21, R. 90, after the expiry of 30 days he must bring his case within S. 18 of the Limitation Act and to enable him to do so, it is not enough for him to show that the execution proceedings were irregular and fraudulent, but he must carry the fraud further and show that the existence of his right to set aside the sale has been kept concealed from his knowlege by the fraud of the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser. 1 C.W.N. 67, Foll. But in order to make limitation operate when a fraud has been committed by one who has obtained property thereby, it is for him to show that the injured complainant has had clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud at a time which is too remote for the suit to be brought. 17 Bom. 341, Foll.

Where in a suit to set aside an execution sale it was found that processes in connexion with the execution case had been fraudulently suppressed and that the plaintiffs came to know of the fraudulent sale only seven or eight days before the institution of the suit,

Held, that it was not an unreasonable inference to draw that as a matter of fact the fraud that had been committed in the execution proceedings continued and by reason of its continuing influence the plaintiffs were kept out of the knowledge of the sale, and the plaintiffs were entitled to the benefit S. 18 of the Limitation Act. ———Nature of.

Though an unconditional acknowledgment has been held to imply a promise to pay, it is not by itself sufficient to constitute a 'promise' within the meaning of S. 25 (3) of the Contract Act. So an acknowledgment made after the expiry of the period of limitation on the original note cannot form the basis of a suit. (Ross, J.). KANAI LAL MARWARI v. BABULAL MUCHI. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 604.

———Nature of.

Although an acknowledgment may imply a promise for extending limitation it is, without a promise, insufficient to create a contract and cannot be enforced as such. Being neither contract, grant nor disposition of property nor analogous to any of them, it is not a document contemplated by S. 92 of the Evidence Act. So the prohibition regarding the admissibility of oral evidence is not applicable to an acknowledgment. 52 B. 521; 57 C. 394; 28 A.L.J. 532; 52 A. 169, Ref. to. (Niyogi, A. J. C.).
